The resolution as to Eugene V. Debs was referred to the judiciary committee on the assurance of Mr Hoar chairman of the committee, that early action would be taken

At 2 o'clock Mr Tillman took the floor on the pending silver bond bill, the galleries filled quickly and the senator was accorded close attention

DIGGING FOR GOLD.

A Headless Ghost Plays a Practical Joke on an Old Hoosier.

ELKHART, Ind., Jan. 30.—Neil Punches, 60, says for two years a headless spirit has come to his bedroom nightly and aroused him. When he hesitates about unlocking the door the spirit would play a tune with the latch. Punches and the spirit would sit at the dining room table for hours and talk Just how the headless phantom managed to articulate he does not state.

The visitor told Punches that there is a large amount of gold hidden in his orchard and that he should dig for it He has dug down about 10 feet all over his orchard, but found no gold, and has concluded his ghostship is a notorious liar

TILLMAN'S TALK.

Charges Many Bad Things to President Cleveland.

CALLS OFFICIALS MEAN NAMES.

Asks God to Forgive Him For Being Present at the Inauguration of Mr. Cleveland and Denounces the Senate For Not Impeaching the President. Threatens a Revolution.

WASHINGTON, Jan 30.—Such a torrent of invective has seldom been heard in the senate as that in the speech of Mr Tillman (Pop., S C.) yesterday. Veteran members of the body characterized the speech as one of the most remarkable in the history of the upper branch of congress. It abounded in statements of a sensational character, arraigning President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle and other men in high places.

SENATOR TILLMAN.

There was a directness of statement and a dramatic manner of delivery which awed floor and galleries. The gestures of the senator were used frequently in acting his words At one time he made a profound salute and "tipped his hat to Sherman" as the "financial victor of a quarter of a century.

The galleries were moved alternately to applause and laughter Pausing for a sip of water amid roars of laughter, he remarked: "I seldom wet my whistle while I speak, still you can't run a windmill on water."

The next moment there was a hush through the chamber as the senator applied such names as "Judas" to a member of the cabinet or criticised the president in bitter terms. At times the senator's voice sank to a whisper, as, for instance, when he gave warning of the approach of a popular revolution and communism and the marching on Washington of a host with rifles in their hands

Again his voice resounded through the chamber and the outer corridors as he called senators and members "cowards" for not resorting to impeachment, and dramatically called upon God to forgive him (Tillman) for attending the inauguration of President Cleveland.

BELVA LOCKWOOD DISBARRED.

She Was Accused of Accepting a Fee to Which She Was Not Entitled.

WASHINGTON, Jan 30 — Belva A. Lockwood, once a presidential candidate on the Woman's Rights ticket and now a practicing attorney in this city, was disbarred from practice as an agent or attorney before the pension bureau. This action grew out of a charge made against Mrs Lockwood by the pension department, accusing her of improperly accepting a fee of $25 in a pension claim

The bureau officials called her attention to the alleged improper charge and insisted that she return the fee to the claimant, as it was held that she never performed any services in the case for which the fee was paid She refused to comply with this demand and her downfall is the result

STOLEN, A POSTOFFICE.

Was at Top of Alleghany, Va., and Paid $4 Per Year.

When Uncle Sam gets the present weighty affairs of the nation straightened out and can give attention to minor details of the government, some of the people living in Pocahontas county, Va., will be glad to have him scatter a few handbills worded somewhat as follows

"Lost, Strayed or Stolen.—Postoffice known as Top of Alleghany. Description, Plain country office, paying a salary of $4 per annum."

The above named postoffice has been kidnapped. Prior to 1895 T. J. Williams had been postmaster. Then he changed his residence, leaving W. F. Willfong as deputy. A few days since Williams carried away the entire postoffice paraphernalia, and when last heard from he and the postoffice were in Green Bank, ten miles away. Some of the patrons of the abducted office went to Monterey making inquiry as to how to proceed to get the office back.—New York World.

Warriors Enjoy a Joke.

General McAlpin always relishes his little joke, and he always has a good stock on hand. Now, Captain A. A. Yates of Schenectady is another great joker, and is never so happy as when propounding an apparently unanswerable conundrum. The captain's friends know this, and never lose an opportunity of firing conundrums at him. The other day Captain Yates called at general headquarters, and had the following launched on him by General McAlpin:

"Why is Police Commissioner Roosevelt like a tailor?"

Auty pondered and puzzled and finally reluctantly gave it up.

"Why, that is the easiest of the easiest," said the general. "Because he made the saloon keepers close."—Albany Journal.

MAY CAUSE A BREAK.

Much Bitterness, but No Scandal—Insist the Match Is Disrespectful to Their Mother's Memory—Began Before Harrison's Election In 1888.

The marriage of Benjamin Harrison to Mrs. Dimmick is not approved of by Mr Harrison's family. The statement that Mrs. McKee will visit Indianapolis before the wedding is true, but she will not go to prepare a home for her father's bride. She will visit friends outside of her family and will remove from her former home the last of her personal possessions.

Indianapolis friends of Mrs. Benjamin McKee and Mr. Russell Harrison and of the late Mrs. Benjamin Harrison are surprised and annoyed at the persistent reports from New York that the children of ex President Harrison are reconciled to his approaching marriage.

Nothing could be further from the truth. As matters stand now the marriage of the ex president will make a distinct and possibly permanent breach in his family and separate him definitely from his children. Neither Mrs. McKee nor Russell Harrison is on speaking terms with their stepmother to be, and both have interposed an earnest though dignified opposition to the proposed marriage.

This opposition arises, they insist, not from any dislike of their father marrying a second time, but solely from a feeling that circumstances connected with the history of the acquaintance which leads to the approaching marriage make the event an act of disrespect to the memory of their mother.

The true story of the acquaintance and courtship of Benjamin Harrison and Mary Dimmick, as told by one whose authority is as undeniable as would be that of Benjamin Harrison himself, is given below. Much of detail that would be interesting is suppressed because its publication would serve no good purpose, but, as a matter of justice to the children of the ex president and to forestall the flood of gossip and scandal that would naturally follow the open break in the family, the friends of Mrs. McKee and Mr. Harrison feel that a plain, authoritative statement of the facts should be made at once.

In the first place, it should be stated that Mrs. Dimmick's character as a woman is in no way involved in this matter. That she has exercised over the president an influence which interfered with the domestic peace of the family and that he permitted and encouraged that influence is the most serious charge involved.

The trouble really began before Harrison's election. During the excitement of the campaign in 1888, Mrs. Harrison, at the suggestion of her sister, Mrs. Scott-Lord, invited her niece, Mrs. Dimmick, to Indianapolis. Mrs. Dimmick, it is said, was in very low spirits at that time, and the idea was that the life and excitement there would divert her mind and improve her health.

Mrs. Dimmick at once began to take a very active part in the Harrison family affairs. Her influence over General Harrison quickly became very strong. After some months and before the family went to Washington, Mrs. Harrison discussed with an intimate friend here the best way of getting Mrs Dimmick out of the family.

When the family was settled in the White House, matters became constantly more difficult. Mrs Dimmick gained steadily more influence over the president in family matters. Mrs. Harrison suffered what she considered were indignities. Mrs. McKee and Russell Harrison sided with their mother. The president stubbornly insisted that they were foolishly and causelessly jealous.

Mrs. Dimmick's mother died and the restrictions of the mourning period deprived her of outside companionship and threw her more than ever into the company of the president.

Finally Mrs. Dimmick was given to understand, through a relative, that her continued residence in the White House was unwelcome to Mrs. Harrison. She appealed to the president, and he refused to consent to her departure under such circumstances.

The quarrel between the president and Mrs. Harrison became critical. That it did not become public was due to her own good sense and the efforts of her son and daughter, who were horrified at the prospect of a "White House scandal."

Matters were adjusted somehow, but there continued to be unpleasant friction until Mrs Harrison's final illness began. Mrs Dimmick was installed by the president as nurse. Between her and Mrs. McKee, who also lived at the White House, there was a state of armed neutrality until the death of Mrs. Harrison ended the strain.

Mrs Harrison had endeavored during her illness to bring about a pleasanter state of affairs in the family, and for a time her work seemed to be successful. It is understood that one basis of the compromise was that no such event as that about to take place would be considered.

Mrs Dimmick continued to live in the White House. After the president's term ended, Mrs. McKee returned to Indianapolis to prepare her father's home for his permanent residence. Mrs Dimmick quickly appeared. As soon as she could without attracting comment, Mrs McKee left, and she and her husband have since made their home elsewhere.

Last summer Mr Harrison took a cottage in the Adirondacks and asked Mrs McKee to live with him there. She consented and Mrs. Dimmick promptly appeared as a guest. There was more [illegible]

UNDER 20 FEET OF SNOW.

Adventures of Three Miners Who Were Caught by an Avalanche.

E. J. W. Fraser, one of the officers of the Red Hill Mining company, has just received a letter, dated the 7th, from the [illegible] agent at Leavenworth, which gives an account of a snowslide which occurred at Red Mountain a few days ago. The writer says:

"On the night the three boys from the Red Hill came back. On the morning of Dec. 28, about 6 o'clock, they were swept away by a snowslide, which demolished the building in which they were sleeping and buried them in 20 feet of snow, and but for the substantial chimney they would have perished. Bill Nack was the only one who by chance was able to get out. He fortunately was near the chimney, and managed to crawl out, and, with a shake, dug Allen out. He was nearly dead. After he had sufficiently recovered they started in to dig out McKenzie. They could hear him moaning, and with the appliances at hand it took three hours to reach him. He was in bad shape, and has not fully recovered yet.

"They were scantily dressed, and were compelled to tunnel to the ruins and get their clothing. They worked all day in their stocking feet, until the clothing was found. They remained two days after the slide, found all the provisions and stored them in the cellar.

"It took them eight days to come down to Leavenworth. They said it was only wasting money to try and work in the mine, as they could not make satisfactory headway. It snowed two or three feet every day. One slide covered up the work, and it took two days to get through it. The slides would cover up the work as fast as it was uncovered, and they concluded to abandon it. The slide filled up the creek to a depth of 60 or 70 feet, and only the tail end of the slide struck them."—Spokane Spokesman Review.

THEY THINK ALIKE.

Mysterious Bond That Exists Between Twin Sisters.

Tillie and Lizzie Warner of Philadelphia are wonderful twins. They have never been separated 24 hours in the 19 years of their existence. Thoroughly well authenticated circumstances prove that a mysterious bond exists between the sisters.

If Tillie has a tooth pulled, Lizzie has toothache. Recently it was necessary for Tillie to undergo a surgical operation. Lizzie suffered pain, although she was a mile away from the scene, and did not know Tillie was under a surgeon's care.

While the street car strike was on Lizzie dropped her work and said, "I must go to Tillie." She ran out and found her sister crouched in a doorway, in front of which a mob was holding a [illegible] nonunion crew on a trolley car. Either sister can find the other in a crowd of any size without hunting. The resemblance between the girls is remarkable.

Their recollections of past events are precisely the same. Neither one can recall a single occurrence that did not happen in the presence of both. It takes the minds of both to retain a lasting recollection of any happening, but when the facts once impressed upon their minds neither one forgets its least important feature.—New York Recorder.

COULD KILL A DOZEN.

HINES SHOCKED BY A 2,000 VOLT CURRENT OF ELECTRICITY.

He Is Alive and Tells How It Feels. Seemed as Though Every Nerve Was In Flame. Was Turning on a Switch. His Many Escapes From Death.

[illegible] H. Hines [illegible] superintendent [illegible] Electrical works [illegible] years old. He has [illegible] the [illegible] prosperous and [illegible] three months [illegible] circumstances [illegible] Mr. Hines [illegible] from death [illegible] accidentally came into [illegible] the [illegible] light department of the factory and received a shock of 2,000 volts.

"I really do not know how it happened," he said a few days since, "but while I was throwing the switch on the temporary switchboard to the primary circuit I became conscious of a frightful burning sensation. It seemed to me as if I were being consumed by a flame, which swept through me from right to left. Then there was a momentary break. My thoughts were jumbled together. The one predominant thought which seemed to [illegible] was fire.

"The next thing I knew was when I was standing at the telephone in the office and shouting to central to send to police headquarters for an ambulance.

"Then I became abnormally calm. It seemed only a moment afterward that Dr. George Dowling came in and began to look me over. By that time I of course realized that I had received an electrical shock of sufficient voltage to have killed a dozen men. The very thought of it [illegible] me. Suddenly things began to grow dim and vague around me. One object after the other faded away until I was in total darkness.

"When I again opened my eyes I was at my home. An ambulance had taken me there. I was told that I had had a convulsion. I felt the fit coming on again and requested to be taken back to the office in order to spare my wife and children such a frightful spectacle. The ambulance accordingly conveyed me to the office, and although the distance is only four blocks the doctor found it necessary to give me two hypodermic injections on the way in order to calm me.

"At the office I went into convulsion after convulsion, the intervals being filled with such a nauseating sensation as made each awakening many more times disagreeable than death. Thanks to the doctor's unflagging efforts for three hours, my equilibrium was at last entirely restored, and I felt strong enough to go home and go to bed. I awoke refreshed in the morning. The right arm, through which the current had passed into my body, was stiff and sore, but with this exception I felt quite well and strong. I was able to attend to my duties and paid several business calls in New York without experiencing very much inconvenience.

"I am still a little nervous, and the pain in the arm has not altogether subsided either. Still, I do not think that my experience will entail any permanent injury either to my mind or body.

"I feel just as though I'd been having a long rest," added Mr Hines. "I believe that shock did more for me than $1,000 worth of medicine. It has cured my rheumatism. Occasionally a dizziness seizes me and I feel faint. But since striking the air I have improved wonderfully, and I feel well and strong. I have suffered a great deal with rheumatism. I am free from those pains now, and if they should return I would be willing to risk another shock to get rid of them."

Mr. Hines is modest and spoke with great reluctance about himself. But his wife and Mrs. [illegible] Hines, his mother, are exceedingly proud of him and never tire talking about him.

"My son has had many narrow escapes," said Mrs. Hines, Sr., "and some of them were no less marvelous, perhaps, than the shock of yesterday. While putting up an electrical plant two years ago in Tampico, Mexico, he received a shock which threw him across the room right into the flywheel of a dynamo. An injury to the knee was the only damage he sustained.

A LOFTY TUNNEL.

Through Solid Granite In Pike's Peak to Supply Water.

The highest tunnel in the world, 11,[illegible] feet above sea water, is to be bored [illegible] through Pike's Peak [illegible] the peak [illegible]

Cripple Creek's rapid growth has led the people of Colorado Springs to fear [illegible] the [illegible] of Beaver creek, which [illegible] Colorado Springs now gets its water from Beaver creek, but the place is growing fast, and to insure water for the future [illegible] to tunnel the mountain and tap the Beaver creek [illegible] Bear creek flow has been let.

The tunnel will be [illegible] a mile and a quarter of solid gray granite, as hard a stone as is known. The work will start on the east ledge of the mountain [illegible] from Colorado City, and will run through to the northwest side, to the rocky bank of Beaver creek. The tunnel will have a pitch of 6 feet in every 100 feet, a fact which will insure a rapid flow of water.

When the diverted stream reaches the tunnel's outlet, it will fall 500 feet in the sheer into Bear Creek canyon, with which torrent it will mingle its waters.

The tunnel will have a Gothic roof, vertical side and a flat base. Its dimensions will be a width of five feet by a height of seven feet. The body of water to which it will give egress will be large enough to form not only a picturesque fall, but one which will be little short of [illegible] when the element of its height is taken into consideration.

A reservoir will be built at the Beaver creek side, and the water will be let into the tunnel only as it is needed.—Chicago Tribune.

FIGHT ON A LOCOMOTIVE

An Engineer's Desperate Struggle With a Drunken Fireman.

Crazed by liquor, Barney Long of Schuylkill Haven, a fireman on a Reading coal train, the other night attempted to murder the engineer and steal the locomotive.

The crew, with W. H. White as conductor, started from Port Richmond, where Long, unknown to the crew, took on several bottles of liquor. On coming up the line the engineer, noticing that the supply of steam was getting low, remonstrated with the fireman for his negligence, when it was seen that he was intoxicated.

The steam becoming very low, the engineer cut loose from the train at Monocacy, three miles from Birdsboro, and started for the latter place to telegraph for assistance. Fireman Long was then crazed by the liquor, and, noticing that the engine was running empty, he climbed on the footboard of the large coal dirt burner and started to creep into the engineer's cab to stop the engine. On the narrow footboard of the rapidly moving engine the fight began.

The struggle was fierce and the engineer grabbed a monkey wrench and commenced striking the fireman with it. He was unable to entirely subdue him, and when Birdsboro was reached, the engineer saw that a switch was thrown and that they were running into a siding. The locomotive was stopped and the engineer ran back.

Then the fireman, seeing the engineer off the engine, reversed it, but fortunately the switch was thrown again in time and the only damage done was the running of the engine off the track. The fireman was seriously injured, and it is thought his skull was fractured by the terrible beating.—Philadelphia Press.

BILLY PLEADS FOR HIS UNCLE

John H. Hammond's Young Nephew Writes to President Cleveland.

When news of the imprisonment at Pretoria, Transvaal, of John Hayes Hammond, the American mining engineer, reached the home of the prisoner's brother, W. S. Hammond of Visalia, Cal., the family were greatly alarmed and discussed the probable fate of their relative with much concern in the presence of the smaller children. Billy, the 9 year old nephew of the prisoner, who is greatly attached to his uncle, concluded that the only way he could assist him was in making an immediate appeal to the president. Without taking any one into his confidence, the little lad procured writing material and posted the following letter to the chief executive:

French [illegible] main floor of the Madison Square Garden, all brilliantly lighted, where two bands will be [illegible] and the atmosphere will be heavy with fragrance.

Among the preparations now going on is an elaborate scheme of floral decorations. Flowers in profusion are to decorate the interior of the building. Streamers of roses will hang from the roof. The edges of the boxes will bear floral decorations, and emblems and designs will appear in various conspicuous parts of the building, symbolizing gayety, love, music, etc.

Order is to be maintained throughout the evening, but spontaneous gayety, which is likely to break out in the wineroom through the opening of cold bottles and the effervescing of lively spirits, will not be interfered with.

The wineroom is one of the sights of a French ball, and it generally witnesses a larger consumption of champagne than takes place any other evening of the year. The profits from this source are of course very large, but, like all the other profits of the French ball, they go to maintaining an admirable charity which has this one entertainment as its main source of sustenance.

The preparations for the ball are now well under way, and costumes that will appear are in process of manufacture either here or in Europe. The ball this year, in general terms, is to be modeled after the celebrated "Fetes de Nuits" that attract so many visitors to the Jardin de Paris, the Moulin Rouge and the Bal Bullier, in Paris.

In addition to this entire change from the programmes of French balls of previous winters in New York is a departure in the way of dancers. The services of theatrical managers have been called in to give to the entertainment a certain direction without sacrificing any of the spontaneity that is its essential characteristic.

The town has been scoured for the prettiest girls that could be secured. One hundred and fifty of these have been retained by the Cercle Francais de l'Harmonie, and they are being now drilled in fancy dances and skillfully devised marches.

Individual French dancers of Bullier and repute are likewise coming from Paris. You will not know as you mix among the crowd of dancers on Madison Square Garden floor whether the man the fairy or the duchess to whom you speak be a professional dancer or a looker on.

The pantaloon, the policeman or the courtier who saunters across the floor may have just arrived from the Moulin Rouge or he may be some well known New York clubman appearing here in the disguise.

These dancers may not even know each other. They will dance in an [illegible] and unconnected way as it suits the fancy of each, but it is said to [illegible] their dancing will be so attractive that they will instantly gather together little groups of admirers.

A new feature, never before introduced at a French ball in New York, is the gathering together of all the masqueraders at a certain hour of the evening for the purpose of passing judgment upon their costumes. This will make a grand march which for picturesqueness and brilliancy it would be hard to equal. The lady having the handsomest, the most appropriate or the most striking costume is to be awarded by the judges who will review the parade a diamond crescent now on exhibition in a jeweler's window.—New York World.

CLARA BARTON.

Clara Barton, the president of the American Red Cross society, is [illegible] far too [illegible] years [illegible] tering [illegible] wants of [illegible] photographer. Consequently the pictures of her that have been printed for the last three [illegible] have been [illegible] less than [illegible] ons, having been taken from old wood cuts. The distinguished philanthropist was too modest to complain, however, and would probably never have changed the order of things had not some friends whom she recently visited in Evanston, Ills., persuaded her to have a new picture taken. She consented, and it gives a correct likeness of her, showing her kindly features as they are today, somewhat seamed by the hand of time, but softened by the goodness and gentleness which has made her name beloved in many lands.

Miss Barton, who is now on her way toward bleeding Armenia, began her work of relief early in life. She was a clerk in the patent office at Washington when the civil war broke out, but at once resigned her position. She was in Baltimore when the Massachusetts soldiers were mobbed there and nursed over 40 of the victims. Then she went to the front and shared the sufferings of the boys in blue until the close of the war. Her unwearying devotion and countless services to the soldiers won for her the name of "Angel of the Battlefield."

In 1869 she went to Europe for rest and while there first heard of the Red Cross society. While at Bern the Franco-Prussian war broke out, and within three days Miss Barton was asked to join in the relief work, and she at once went to the front. She remained with the German army, carrying cheer and aid into the beleaguered cities, until she had finished her work. She has been honored by emperors and nations and has freely sacrificed health and fortune in her philanthropic efforts. Her more recent work among sufferers from fire and flood in this country is too well known to need mention, and she will take with her into her new field the hopes and well wishes of many millions of admirers.

The sons of many of these men are reading today just as fascinating tales as those from the pen of the same writer. Although Mr. Trowbridge began writing half a century ago, he still holds his place in boyish popularity with those three other authors of the same school, Oliver Optic, Horatio Alger and Elijah Kellogg.

Mr. Trowbridge was born in western New York about 70 years ago. When but a youth of 18, he went to New York city and started boldly in to make his living by his pen. It was discouraging work there, so he went to Boston, where he had better success. His first successful novel, "Neighbor Jackwood," was written in 1855 and was an expression of his antislavery sentiments. It was while he was editor of Our Young Folks that he wrote his first juvenile story. A serial was wanted, and those offered were not suitable.

"Trowbridge," said the [illegible] one day, "you must write that story."

So the story of Jack Hazard was begun, and it was such a success that for five years Jack's adventures held the boards. Other heroes just as popular followed, for by that time the author's work was much in demand.

Mr. Trowbridge's fame as a story teller has long overshadowed that which his poetry once gained for him. Years ago, however, he was known as the author of that charming humorous poem which told of the [illegible] of Darius Green and his flying machine. AN UNWRITTEN BOOK.

How John Speer Is Printing His Reminiscences of Senator Jim Lane.

JOHN SPEER.

A most novel biography will soon be issued in Wichita, Kan. It is already more than half finished, but not a page of manuscript has been written. The author is John Speer, an octogenarian printer, and he has no use for such mediums as pen and ink in his literary labors. When he wanted to make a book that should be a personal history of that picturesque pioneer statesman of Kansas, the late Senator Jim Lane, he went to the case and began putting the story in type. Speer was a lifelong friend of General Lane and depends on his wonderful memory for the facts of which the story of the stirring life of the Kansas patriot is being constructed. He was with Lane in the secret Union league caucus in Baltimore the day before the second nomination of Lincoln.

His book is to be one of 400 pages, and he has completed nearly 300 pages. He could have written it all out had he chosen, as he is a veteran editor as well as compositor. He has fitted up two cases of type in the library of his son's house. For an imposing stone he uses the bed of an old Washington hand press, the relic of a printing office which he once owned in Lawrence, and which was burned down by the guerrilla Quantrell in one of his raids. On that fatal morning Mr. Speer's office was burned and two of his sons were killed. Mr. Speer works at his case for eight hours a day and sets up on an average 1,000 ems an hour.

Mr. Speer is remarkably well preserved for his years and bids fair to round out the century. His book is full of stories of thrilling adventures and interesting reminiscences of General Lane. He expects to have it ready about March 1. It will not be put on sale, but the edition of 1,000 copies will be distributed among Mr. Speer's friends.

MANY SOLDIERS LOVED HER.

Thousands of Union veterans and not a few who wore the gray will be pained to learn that Miss Harriet P. Dame, who was fondly called "mother" by the whole Eighteenth army corps, is suffering for the second time within a year with a broken leg. Miss Dame is the president of the Ex-Army Nurses' association and one of the few women heroes of the civil war. She is now 81 years old and lives in a neat little cottage in Washington.

Mother Dame went to the front in 1861 from her home in Concord, N. H., and joined the Second New Hampshire regiment. She remained in the field for four years and eight months, probably serving longer than any other woman. She was present at most all of the important battles of that long struggle from Bull Run to Gettysburg, often under fire and many times suffering the same hardships as the soldiers.

She went all through the Virginia campaign, often marching for miles with her regiment. At the battle of Fair Oaks she was ordered to the rear, but she saw her boys suffering in the trenches, and she refused to go. Twice during this battle she escaped death almost miraculously. Once a shell tore through her tent just as she had left it, and another burst above her head as she was cooking some broth, but she was not even wounded. While camped at Yorktown one night she was told to put out her light, as the Confederates were shelling the camp and making her tent the target of their guns. At the second battle of Bull Run she was taken prisoner, but was passed through the lines after doing good service in the Confederate hospitals. She followed the field ambulances wherever they went and proved a ministering angel to the wounded soldiers. How many men owe their lives to her careful nursing will never be known.

MISS HARRIET P. DAME.

She received a vote of thanks from the legislature of her state and $500. With the money she founded a home for the veterans of her regiment, and the pension which she receives from the government she gives to the poor and needy.

Compensations of Blindness.

Signor Ansaldi, a student, blind from birth, graduated recently with high honors from the Florence Institute de Studi Superiori, the school for post graduate university work. His thesis on "Compensations In the Senses of the Blind" was declared by the examiners to be an important contribution of new material to physiological psychology.

MAY BUY ST. THOMAS

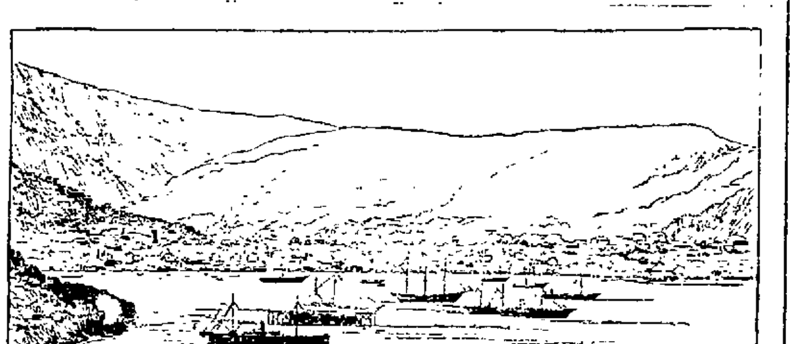
IT WOULD MAKE A FINE COALING STATION FOR OUR NEW NAVY.

It Is Only About as Large as Manhattan Island, but Has a Splendid Harbor and Many Tropical Attractions—Denmark Desires to Sell.

The little kingdom of Denmark has three small islands to sell and wants the United States to buy them. These three islands are St. John, St. Croix and St. Thomas, and they constitute the northern tail to the Lesser Antilles group. They do not cut much of a figure on the map and you have to look rather sharply to find them, but naval experts are of the opinion that their possession by this country is an urgent necessity and of first importance.

St. Thomas, the smallest of the three, is the one that would be of the greatest value to us. In the first place, it has one of the finest harbors to be found in all the West Indies, and in the second place, it is of such a natural formation that it has been called the Little Gibraltar. These two advantages make St. Thomas a most admirable location for a naval station. This is something that Uncle Sam hasn't got. In all the sweep of the broad Atlantic coast there is not one port outside of our own country where an American cruiser could be sure of getting her bunkers filled with coal in time of war.

It is not until recent years that we have needed a coaling station, but now that our navy is beginning to assume respectable proportions this necessity has been realized. When the recent war talk was first begun, the lack of a coaling station was at once pointed out by our naval officers. At the same time England's resources in this respect were mentioned and no little uneasiness was felt at Washington. There would certainly be cause for alarm in case of war. There is St. Lucia, where thousands of redcoats are quartered behind the grim guns of an impregnable fortress. At Bermuda the cross of St. George waves over another British fortress. England could collect a big fleet in West Indian waters and with these two places as bases of supplies could sweep our coast, while our naval force could not venture far from home ports.

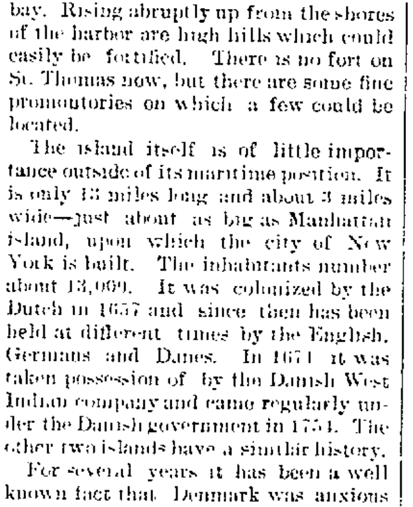


THE HARBOR OF ST. THOMAS.

In many ways St. Thomas is valuable as a strategic point in naval operations. It is directly in the path of several steamship lines to South American countries. It is, in fact, the keystone of the West Indian arch. In its harbor the whole white squadron could swing at anchor with safety. The basin is almost completely landlocked by an island which nearly blocks the entrance to the bay. Rising abruptly up from the shores of the harbor are high hills which could easily be fortified. There is no fort on St. Thomas now, but there are some fine promontories on which a few could be located.

The island itself is of little importance outside of its maritime position. It is only 13 miles long and about 3 miles wide—just about as big as Manhattan island, upon which the city of New York is built. The inhabitants number about 13,000. It was colonized by the Dutch in 1657 and since then has been held at different times by the English, Germans and Danes. In 1671 it was taken possession of by the Danish West Indian company and came regularly under the Danish government in 1754. The other two islands have a similar history.

For several years it has been a well known fact that Denmark was anxious to get rid of her West Indian possessions. There was a time when a big revenue was sent from St. Thomas to Copenhagen, but this was when that port was a general distributing port for all the West Indies. St. Thomas was then a port where almost every ship sailing south stopped. All the other islands sent their products there to be reshipped to the United States and Europe and went there after their imports. For years this has been changed. The commerce that once made the harbor of St. Thomas a lively place has drifted elsewhere, and now only a shadow of her great trade remains. These three islands now cost Denmark about $150,000 annually, and she is far too frugal to keep this up indefinitely. Denmark, with no navy, has no need of a coaling station.



MAP SHOWING THE POSITION OF ST. THOMAS.

The recent rumor that the Danish government was about to offer these islands to the United States for a small sum is probably correct. Twice before have such negotiations been under way, and once they were almost completed. Had it not been for a hurricane in 1867 these islands would probably now belong to the United States. Secretary Seward in that year concluded a treaty with Denmark by which St. John, St. Croix and St. Thomas were to be sold to the United States for the sum of $7,500,000. Just as the treaty was about to be ratified, along came a hurricane and demolished nearly every building on the latter island. The senate thereupon concluded that we did not want an island subject to such boisterous winds and refused to ratify the treaty. Then the scheme fell through.

The situation today is different. Since that year little or no damage has been done by hurricanes in St. Thomas. We need a coaling station there vastly more than we did then, and Denmark's anxiety to sell has been increased. It has been intimated that if we do not buy, Denmark will give the islanders their freedom. If this should happen, the British residents there would at once apply to England for a protectorate, and John Bull would try to gobble up one more vantage point off our seaboard. Germany is anxious to buy the islands, but the Danes hate the Germans and do not want any European power to have their islands.

The islanders themselves are quite willing to come under the protection of Uncle Sam. The question was once put to a vote and the result was a big majority in the affirmative. The population of St. Thomas is very much mixed. The majority of the islanders are negroes, of course, but those in power are English, Spanish, French and Danish. English is the most common language. It is used in the schools, although Danish is taught. The official language is nominally Danish. Merchants and professional men speak two or three languages and many of the natives are equally proficient.

The name of the principal town is really Charlotte Amalia, but it is generally called St. Thomas. It is a good, substantial town and presents a beautiful sight from the sea. The buildings are nearly all solid stone structures of one or two stories. They are not built higher for fear of earthquakes, and they are made of stone because a conflagration once wiped out the town when it was built of wood.

In spite of England's efforts to turn trade away from St. Thomas its fine harbor is still an attraction, and while its commerce has vastly decreased thousands of anchors are dropped there every year. As a commercial coaling depot it is still of great importance. Steamers find it very convenient to fill their bunkers there. The coal is largely brought from England, however, and is sold by an English company which handles over 50,000 tons annually. If we owned St. Thomas, this coal and a great deal more would be brought from the United States and retailed from the government yards to the fleets of all the world. St. Thomas is about five days' sail from New York. If our cruisers could stop there and take on a supply of coal it would be a great advantage.

Aside from its naval importance the island would be found valuable in other ways. It would not take long to restore to St. Thomas part of its commerce. Our manufacturers could use it to great advantage as a distributing point, just as it was used years ago. They could send their goods there and the great fleet of small craft which now exists in West Indian waters would be engaged in carrying the products of our mills and factories to the various islands. The abundant crops of St. Croix and St. John would be returned to us and there would be a handsome profit all around.

With a military station there and direct steamship communication it is likely that St. Thomas would soon find favor as a winter resort, so that big hotels as well as forts might be built there. The climate is all that could be desired. Even in summer it is rarely above 90 degrees and in winter seldom falls below 60 degrees. Placed as it is several hundred feet above the sea the town is a healthy one. The streets are well paved and the drainage is excellent.

The rest of the island is little better than a wilderness. Of the 25 square miles, but little is under cultivation. There are many abandoned sugar plantations which have been idle since slavery was abolished. The land is fertile enough, but the people have so long depended on commerce that agriculture has almost died out. A recent attempt has been made to revive it and perhaps Yankee farmers might find a way to independence and comfort by making for themselves homes in this semitropical country. They will not do it, however, until the stars and stripes float over Charlotte Amalia and whether they shall or not will depend, perhaps, on the events of the next few months.

Dine With Their Servants.

One day every year Lord and Lady Aberdeen dine with their servants.

MRS. DIMMICK'S WOMANLY WISDOM.

She Knows When to Talk and When to Keep Still.

Mrs. Mary Lord Dimmick, the woman whom ex-President Harrison is soon to marry, is a niece of his first wife, who died in October, 1892, during the last year of Mr. Harrison's administration. Mrs. Dimmick's first husband was Walter Dimmick, son of Samuel E. Dimmick, a well known lawyer of Honesdale, Pa., who at one time was attorney general of the state. She was quite young then and Mr. Dimmick died soon after the marriage. Some years after this her mother died, and the sad circumstance enlisted the sympathy of her aunt, Mrs. Harrison, who invited her to make her home at the White House.

Mrs. Dimmick gladly accepted and proved to be invaluable as a companion and assistant. While the wife of the president was much engaged with the social duties which her position demanded, Mrs. Dimmick took charge of the household and looked after the personal comfort of the president and his wife. They both became very fond of her, and when Mrs. Harrison fell ill it was Mrs. Dimmick who was most often to be found at her bedside. After the funeral she became more than ever indispensable to the president. He frequently remarked that he liked to have his wife's niece about the house because she was quiet, methodical in her habits and knew how to keep her own counsel. He once said:

MRS. MARY LORD DIMMICK.

"She is the only woman around the house who doesn't talk when I want to think."

Mrs. Dimmick is a lovely and gracious woman in the prime of life. Mr. Harrison is 62 and young at that. He has lived a very lonely life at his home in Indianapolis since his wife died, for his two children are grown up and have families of their own.

Mrs. Dimmick is the daughter of Mrs. Lizzie Scott Lord, who was the elder sister of Mrs Harrison. Her father was Russell F. Lord, who was at one time general superintendent of the Delaware and Hudson Canal company. Mrs. Dimmick's mother was twice married. Mrs. Dimmick is now living in New York city with her sister, Mrs. Parker, whose husband, Lieutenant Parker, was a military attache of the White House during General Harrison's administration.

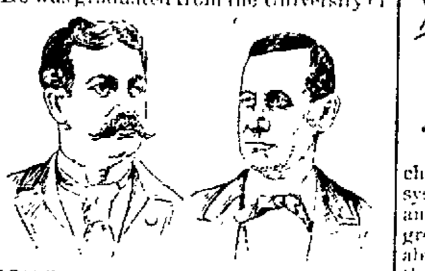
THE NEW STATE'S NEW SENATORS.

Careers of Frank J. Cannon and Arthur Brown.

The men who are to represent the brand new state of Utah in the United States senate are Frank J. Cannon and Arthur Brown. They are both Republicans and ardent supporters of free silver. They are young men from a young state, and their careers will be watched with much interest.

Mr. Cannon is a native of Salt Lake City and is the son of George Q. Cannon, who is known throughout the country as a political power, a mine owner and the executive head of the Mormon church. He was also mentioned as a candidate for the senate, but his son proved to be more popular. Senator Cannon is a Mormon. He will be at home in Washington, for he has already served one term there as delegate when Utah was a territory. He was again a candidate in 1892, but was defeated by Joseph L. Rawlins, a Democrat.

Mr. Cannon is barely 36 years old. He was graduated from the University of Utah, of which he is now a regent. In his youth he was considered rather wild and once left the Mormon church, but was brought back through the influence of his father. He is a printer and a newspaper writer of some ability. He is an apt pupil of his father, from whom he has gained much knowledge of the game of politics, and is also something of an orator. In one of his recent campaign speeches Mr. Cannon said that the Republican party would roll away the stone from the door and resurrect free silver, or else there would be trouble, which may indicate something of what may be expected of him in the senate.



FRANK J. CANNON. ARTHUR BROWN.

Senator Brown is a gentile. He is one of the most prominent lawyers in the state, and his interests have always been closely connected with those of mine owners. He moved to Utah from Michigan about 15 years ago. He is a vigorous debater and may liven things up a bit in the senate when he gets started.

Sure to Make Money.

"Great idea!" he exclaimed enthusiastically. "I've found a neighborhood almost entirely populated by anarchists."

"What of it?"

"What of it! Why, I'm going to start a shooting gallery there."

"Bah! anarchists don't shoot. They aim to do their work with bombs."

"Ah, but they will shoot in my gallery."

"Why will they?"

"Because I will take pains to have targets that are especially prepared for them. I will have the czar of Russia in the center, with the emperor of Germany on one side of him and the queen of England on the other. There will be half a dozen lesser monarchs around them and a platoon of police on either side of the royal group, so that even the worst shot will be able to hit the image of something that he doesn't like. Oh, I'll get every penny in the neighborhood."—Chicago Post.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va., has to say below, will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had la grippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents per bottle by L. H. Flocken, the druggist.

Topeka Doesn't Like "Trilby."

Topeka was given her first view of "Trilby" as a drama recently, and the verdict is so adverse that "Trilby" troops had better steer clear of Kansas' capital city. The play doesn't end right to suit the Kansas idea. To receive anything like generous applause here the hero must always marry the heroine and raise a large family of children.

Then, again, the people here are so impressionable. They take stage acting in dead earnest. It is said that last night after Svengali died such a horrible death one of the doctors of the town went to the manager of the show and tried to buy his body for the Kansas Medical college.—Kansas City Journal.

MOTHERS

and those about to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its torture, terrors and dangers to both mother and child, by aiding Nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and also the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child. During pregnancy, it prevents "morning sickness" and those distressing nervous symptoms from which so many suffer.

Tanks, Cottle Co., Texas.
DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:
Dear Sir—I took your "Favorite Prescription" previous to confinement and never did so well in my life. It is only two weeks since my confinement and I am able to do my work. I feel stronger than I ever did in six weeks before.
Yours truly,

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:
Dear Sir—I began taking your "Favorite Prescription" the first month of pregnancy, and have continued taking it since confinement. I did not experience the nausea or any of the ailments due to pregnancy after I began taking your "Prescription." I was only in labor a short time, and the physician said I got along unusually well.

MRS BAKER.

We think it saved me a great deal of suffering. I was troubled a great deal with leucorrhea also, and it has done a world of good for me.

Lions Bolder Than Tigers.

The lion does not appear to possess the wariness of a tiger. He will dash into a tied up bait in the most headstrong manner, heedless of the hunter seated behind a screen of bushes, whose presence, with his keen powers of smell, he cannot fail to detect. From what I have heard and seen of his habits I should say he was a bolder animal than the tiger, but by that I do not mean a more dangerous one. In one respect perhaps he is less dangerous than either tiger or panther, for I am inclined to think that it is not so much his habit to feed on putrid flesh as either of the two latter and consequently he does not kill by blood poisoning after mauling his foe so often as the others do. Of late years, since Africa has become more accessible to sportsmen, one hears frequently of lions getting the best of it and leaving their adversaries fairly well mangled, but in nearly all the cases I have heard of, the mauled man recovers, whereas in India as surely as the hot season and its accompaniment, tiger shooting, come around tiger and panther score several deaths, usually by blood poisoning consequent to a mauling received from one of the two.—Scribner's

A Little Boy's Prayer.

Up in the northern section of the city there is a certain household, the most important member of which is a bright little, fair haired, 3-year-old chap, whose artless but pointed utterances form the subjects for many laughs and much neighborhood gossip. A short time since the grandmother of the family had a severe attack of the grip, which resulted in a complete prostration of the vocal organs, and in the hearing of the little fellow it was said that she had lost her voice. That night as he was being prepared for bed he took his place at his mother's knee, and after dutifully repeating the regulation "Now I lay me down to sleep" concluded his devotions with "And, oh, Lord, please help grandma to find her voice again, 'cause if you don't she'll blame me for it."—Washington Star.

Where He Drew the Line.

The proprietor of the hotel, who was himself a fairly decent sort of fellow, came hurrying into the private office, whither the excited head waiter and the two newly registered guests who had assaulted him were waiting in the custody of the special officer of the establishment.

"Gentlemen," declared the proprietor, "such conduct is disgraceful. It so happens that there was nobody else in the dining room to see it, and so some measure of scandal is spared the house. But why did you strike the man?"

"Of course we apologize," said one of the pair, "and deeply regret the painful occurrence, but we were driven to it. When we first entered, one of your waiters seized my coat in such an awkward and precipitate manner as to break off two buttons, but I did not mind that especially. That was enthusiastic welcome. Then the man who took my friend's hat dropped it on the floor and accidentally stepped into it, but I am sure it was a mishap and unintended, so neither of us felt bitterly toward him. Then a third peace killer trod upon my freshly polished shoe and painfully compressed my toe, but no one would believe he had designed to do it. The person with my friend's hat in carrying it and his topcoat to the rack allowed the latter garment to trail across the floor, sleeves hindmost, but you could readily see he was still excited about the hat and was therefore excusable. But when at this moment the imperious head waiter appeared and called, 'Come this way, gents,' I just waited until he had unmistakably pronounced the word 'gents,' and when we were positive he had used the term we both fell upon him, as become men of self respect."

"He said 'gents?'" queried the proprietor, enraged.

"He did."

"Gentlemen, the apology is mine. I said my house had not been scandalized, but it has. Go, fellow," to the head waiter, "and know that you deserved tenfold what you got."—Chicago Record.

The moon these nights is giving the leap year girl grand opportunities early in the campaign.

The Spanish would no doubt like to believe that Gomez's measure for a coffin has been taken.

The new senator from South Carolina seems addicted to the habit of calling people bad names.

Does any one know how Major McKinley is getting along in the practice of law at Canton? Otherwise he seems to be doing well enough.

McKinley clubs are now being organized in Indiana. Beats all the amount of territory that Ohio man's boom is covering these days.

Anyhow the weather man cannot be accused of playing into the hands of the coal barons who are looking for an opportunity to raise prices.

McKinley and Reed are fighting for the Louisiana delegation to the St. Louis convention. It is expected that an even division will be the result.

Murat Halstead has gone to Cuba. Any war news he sends back will undoubtedly be in vigorous English, without any evidence of having been blue-penciled.

With only eight members of the Woman's suffrage association acknowledging that they have read it it would appear that the Woman's Bible has also accumulated no little amount of dust.

Only two members of the local board of health attended the meeting of the state board at Columbus today. It is to be hoped that these two will bring back enough enthusiasm to awaken the whole board.

Before the Morton boom gains any further headway somebody should inform an anxious public whether the smile, indicated by the newspaper cuts of the governor, is permanent or a mere suggestion of the photographer.

Somebody has now discovered, or asserted, that whiskers furnish a hiding place for disease germs. Bearded men should not rush off to a barber shop hastily, however, as the chances are that this is another bare-faced falsehood.

The fact that the Cuban insurgents tried to buy a coffin gave rise to a rumor that General Maximo Gomez had died. It is more probable, however, that it is the desire of the insurgents to give the Spanish cause a decent burial.

Ohio colleges are at the present time educating more students than any other state in the Union. Colleges, academies, normal schools, theological seminaries, schools of medicine, law and science of this state have an attendance of 13,000 young men and 8,000 young women.

The republican state central committee will meet at Columbus, Feb. 8, to fix the time and place for holding the Ohio republican convention. There is a demand for an early convention. One of the important things to be done soon is to elect a solid McKinley delegation to the St. Louis convention.

Dr. Beckwith, president of the Cleveland Homoeopathic Society, has come out boldly against the Mosgrove medical bill and denounces it in very plain language. It might have been expected that the doctors would agree upon this, but the fact that they do not will not in itself render the case necessarily fatal.

There is no longer any doubt as to where the new woman can be found. She is in Cuba, dressed in male attire, armed with matchetes and revolvers, fighting in Gomez's ranks for the cause of the patriots. She is reported fully strong, and here's hoping that she may hit what she aims at.

Cuba is at last getting an official show of sympathy from the senate of the United States. The foreign relations committee has reported a resolution asking the President to use his good offices with Spain and to ask that government to give the patriots belligerent rights. The demand of public sentiment in favor of Cuba has been greatly in advance of the slow senate.

Mr. Gladstone is quoted as saying the Armenian matter "rests with the Almighty." This opinion from one who understands the English government thoroughly is evidence that little hope is expected from that source. Gladstone advises all christian people to pray fervently in behalf of the sufferers. Some people will still cling to the belief that a little shooting will also be necessary.

Senator Foraker is not missing any opportunities to tell the public where Ohio stands regarding the candidacy of Major McKinley. While in New York recently he is quoted as saying: "In Ohio we are thoroughly united in favor of Major McKinley. No Republican in the state opposes him and he will receive the 46 votes at the convention in St. Louis. The sentiment in Ohio is unanimous for Mr. McKinley and we have not reckoned upon any other candidate in case he could not secure the nomination."

Here is a paragraph from Dave S. Fisher's Daily Herald, published in darkest Delaware:

On the night before a Delaware family recently moved to Marion, the little girl of the household said her prayers as usual, but closed them: "Good bye, God. We're going to move to Marion."

Since arriving here the child has been given a course of religious training that has broadened her mind and given her advanced ideas. It is understood that she expects, in a few years, to return to Delaware as a missionary.

Dr. Hensley is not going to be lost in the shuffle down at Columbus. He was in evidence Wednesday, as the following from the Columbus Journal will indicate:

Dr. Hensley, of Marion, promises to be the orator of the house. He made two speeches yesterday and made a decided impression. One was in favor of the medical bill and the other was called out when the judiciary committee reported in favor of indefinitely postponing his bill providing that persons cannot marry inside of one year after being divorced. The adverse report called Mr. Hensley to his feet and in a few minutes he had the sympathy of the house. He said he had introduced the bill with a view to putting a stop to the practice of persons securing a divorce with somebody else's money and marrying on the same day, or so shortly afterwards as to cause public scandal. He has known of a woman securing two divorces in one year and being married on the same day the decrees were granted. Messrs. Rice, of Hardin, and Walton, of Wyandot, came to Mr. Hensley's support and recited similar instances. The result was that the bill was rescued from its intended grave and placed upon today's calendar.

Not a Resident of Marion.

[Fostoria Times, Friday.]

Two infirmary directors from Marion county are in the city today investigating the case of Mr. Cramer, who, it will be remembered, was overcome with gas some weeks ago. Since his painful experience Mr. Cramer has grown no better and is even now not expected to live. He has had constant medical attention and a trained nurse at all times. The expense has been large, and the Marion county officials after an insight into Mr. Cramer's affairs disclaim any knowledge of his residence in their county, but state that he came to this city direct from Cleveland, which if true will make the bill which will reach perhaps $150 fall on that city for payment.

The Second Shoot.

The Marion Buckeye gun club held its regular weekly shoot Wednesday afternoon at the fair grounds. The score was quite low. The following members were present: Harry Johnson, Carl Ramroth, Nelson Abel, Ray Davis, Charles Conrad, Herman Kelner, Urias Washburn and Isaac Wilcox.

Carl Ramroth carried off the honors, making a score of twenty-two out of twenty-five birds.

"SHAMS IN YALE LIFE."

The current number of The Yale Literary Magazine contains a startling article on "Shams in Yale Life." The article was written by E. S. Oviatt, one of the editors of the magazine and a resident of New Haven. After saying that there is [illegible] materialism in college life [illegible],

"Men graduate from this college [illegible] with less mental strength, less moral strength than the average [illegible] whom they pass on the street. There is a very general desire [illegible] to get through on the [illegible] the instructors. A man who has [illegible] study nowadays is called a [illegible], is looked on as an outcast [illegible] finds himself out of sympathy with the body of his associates [illegible] but at the end of the course a [illegible]. It is a well known fact, [illegible] by those in a position to correct it, that the supposed religious work of Dwight Hall during the last two years covers a tremendous amount of hypocrisy—hypocrisy that has at least the one redeeming feature of being apparent on the very face. With all respect the competition for a class deaconship is a most melancholy sight. As much canvassing is done, as much talk excited as in the election of a Tammany chieftain. It is because the position insures social recognition that men most desire it. It is because, along with a baseball and a football champion, a religious leader stands a good chance for future social honors."

Mr. Oviatt concludes his article by saying that in a few years, if things keep on as they now are going, "Yale democracy" will be a thing of the past. The article has been the talk of the campus. The Yale Daily News replies to it in a long editorial and contradicts most of Mr. Oviatt's statements.—Philadelphia Press.

NIAGARA FALLS AMBITIOUS.

Steps Taken to Provide a Harbor For Deep Vessels.

A bill has been prepared at the suggestion of the Niagara Falls chamber of commerce, which will be presented to the New York legislature, providing for the amendment of the city charter so that the city can bond itself for $[illegible] to build docks, wharfs, slips, [illegible] and basins and retain title in the property thus acquired. It provides that the name of the port be changed from that of "the port of Suspension Bridge" to "the port of Niagara Falls." Plans and surveys have been made. Owing to the fact that these basins can be provided for a harbor, with a dock and wharf [illegible] of about five miles, the United States government will be asked to make an appropriation large enough to deepen the channel thereabout so that the lowest draft lake steamers can get to the docks.

Elevators for grain, coal trestles and lumber docks will be constructed and a bid made for the traffic in the products in addition to ore and other freight.

A MESSAGE EXPECTED.

The President May Soon Issue Another.

SUBJECT, GOVERNMENT FINANCES.

[illegible] He Will Arraign Congress For Its Failure to Provide a New Finance System—[illegible] Written In the President's Own Hand, as Usual.

[illegible] —

[illegible] The message expected [illegible] might have [illegible] the issue of [illegible] gold. But the [illegible] point of the message as it is [illegible] of the administration [illegible] the president's views is to be [illegible] a new system of government finance.

Finance Near to His Heart.

[illegible] Mr. Cleveland on the [illegible] very [illegible]. In fact he talks of [illegible] near to his heart and [illegible] in his mind. Some of his [illegible] concerning the failure of congress [illegible] that will relieve the government of its present situation [illegible] very severe and even picturesque. Mr. Cleveland [illegible] blunt and emphatic [illegible] and in private denunciation [illegible] of the [illegible] congress [illegible] careful to choose nice words. He is [illegible] to express himself forcibly [illegible] to impress his hearers as a matter of [illegible]. Understanding the president's great earnestness on this question, [illegible] members of his cabinet are expecting [illegible] message. They look to [illegible] call congress sharply to account, [illegible] by failing to act it is [illegible] the interests of the country and that [illegible] hold it responsible [illegible] shortcomings.

No one expects Mr. Cleveland will be able to secure results in congress, no matter how many messages he may send in. Nor does any one suppose Mr. Cleveland [illegible] entertains the notion that congress [illegible] be driven into compliance with his [illegible]. And yet men who come near to the president [illegible] is not without hope. He [illegible] consistently [illegible] securing the repeal of the [illegible] silver purchase law by a hostile and most unwilling senate. Mr. Cleveland attributes his success on that occasion chiefly to the power of public opinion, in which he is a great believer. He is now not without hope that public sentiment may again bring such pressure to bear upon congress as will secure results before adjournment. At any rate Mr. Cleveland believes it to be his duty, as it certainly is his pleasure, to do everything in his power to rouse public sentiment and to make things uncomfortable for the statesmen in congress. It is with this in view that he meditates another message.

A Hard Worker.

Mr. Cleveland is fond of writing messages to congress. It is said he has written a greater number of messages than all his predecessors combined. He set the pace during his first term with his numerous vetoes of pension bills, [illegible] and during the present term he has found it even more [illegible] to communicate his views in writing to the [illegible] legislature. Mr. Cleveland writes all his messages with his own hand and every bit of manuscript turned out by him is as neat as any schoolgirl's essay. His writing is very regular and he is careful to put in all the punctuation marks. In writing messages he likes to use small [illegible] paper. Mr. Cleveland never employs [illegible]. He does not even dictate [illegible] writes himself or tells Mr. Thurber the substance of what he wishes to have said and the private secretary supplies the phraseology, his own.

This refusal to adopt modern methods of work is one reason why the president finds his task so laborious. He would save himself many hours of drudgery if he would learn to dictate, but he says he is too old a dog to learn new tricks. General Harrison used a stenographer every day while he was in the White House and even now takes with him wherever he goes his private secretary and shorthand writer Mr. Tibbott. The president's messages to congress are never sent to the capitol in the original manuscript. They are transcribed by Major Pruden and Mr. Young of the White House staff [illegible] before going to congress [illegible] while Mr. Cleveland takes possession of the president's [illegible] state papers which she [illegible].

AS A GREAT NATION.

[illegible] of Congressman Joseph G. Cannon [illegible] a Wider Field [illegible]

schools of early days on the Wabash, when around Annapolis a man wasn't in style unless he had been agitated by the great antislavery fight made by his Quaker friends and relatives, and of the developments of his own political sense since the memorable day when he sat under the stand at Rockville and heard the first great speech of O. P. Morton, then candidate for governor, opening the hot campaign of 1860. Finally, however, he got on to what he calls the philosophy of budgets and gave his views as to the principles which should govern the committee on appropriations. With much else he said:

"The true question for the people to ask is not, 'Do we pay more taxes than we did?' but, 'Is what we pay honestly and economically expended?' If yes, then they should be willing to pay more, for just now this nation can earn and save very many dollars by the proper expenditure of one. To state it bluntly, the United States has reached that point where it must assume a new and far higher and more commanding place among the nations. Providence has [illegible] us the supremacy of the western continent, and we cannot abandon our function if we try to do so. It will [illegible] All history shows that a nation, in order to live, must go on developing, and any nation that withdraws its energies and confines them within its own boundaries is certain to become like China or worse. A nation like ours is [illegible] back and disregard the [illegible] duty to [illegible] And hence [illegible] economy, and herein is made evident the truth that parsimony is not economy."

Need of a Navy.

"What is your idea as to immediate action?"

"I would have them all, both navy and defenses, brought to a very high state of efficiency—not for war, but to prevent war. Under Arthur we began to build a navy, and though we have been [illegible] slow we have made a very [illegible] start. We have a navy enough [illegible] what is [illegible] learned [illegible] a navy and have not the [illegible] men who understand the [illegible] and it would [illegible] than [illegible] strengthen [illegible] war. The embassador [illegible] good navy [illegible] to have [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] should make himself familiar with [illegible] details of business in his [illegible] what are the people of that [illegible] and how able are they [illegible] be able to answer these [illegible] at a minute's notice.

Need of More Foreign Trade.

"Did you ever figure out how [illegible] is really being done by the [illegible] foreign trade compared [illegible] what might be done? Why, there [illegible] 1,500,000,000 people and [illegible] 100,000,000 of them can [illegible] manufacture for themselves. [illegible] uncivilized or not entirely [illegible] people who are using only [illegible] each yearly of manufactures [illegible] 20 times as much. The [illegible] them is merely to stimulate [illegible] and develop their capacity [illegible] Look at the vast tropical regions of Spanish America, where they produce almost nothing to compete with [illegible] need almost everything that we manufacture cheaply. Why, we [illegible] sell these people $3,000,000,000 [illegible] worth of stuff in a little [illegible] even if we supplied them with [illegible] household conveniences and [illegible] implements—in which we lead the world, and do it easily. Now what has all this, you will say, got to do with my committee? Why, I would select the best men who could be got for [illegible] places, put them in all important [illegible] there and have them make it [illegible] business to serve this country [illegible] commercial lines, and to get the [illegible] kind of men we must pay them. This country doesn't want cheap men for [illegible] work. We want the best, and, by the blessing of God, we can afford to pay for them.

"I sometimes smile when I think of the protests against increased [illegible] the pledges of retrenchment and [illegible] the [illegible] have [illegible] into a wider field. Take the history of my committee [illegible] illustrates it beautifully. The constitution, you know, [illegible] for raising [illegible] must originate in the house, and, while it does not say that bills for spending money must, yet the reason of the thing carried it, and so for the first 76 years the ways and means committee made appropriation bills. Early in 1865, however, Thad Stevens carried a measure for a separate committee on appropriations, and as he had been chairman of the ways and means he elected to follow the appropriations and was the first chairman in the Thirty-ninth congress. The committee had all the 13 bills till Reed had his great fight with Speaker Carlisle and our Bill Morrison, then chairman of the ways and means. Of course it was taken for granted they wanted to curtail Randall's power, as he was a protectionist. At any rate, they took from the committee seven bills and gave control of them to the special committees having the special subjects in charge, and now we have exclusive control of but six bills.

Paying and Getting.

"A great reform, was it? Well, [illegible] have more work to do than the committee once had with all the bills, [illegible] we necessarily have a sort of supervision over the seven bills brought in by the other committees, on account [illegible] increases coming in, we can measure the advance with precision from year to year. It is destiny that is forcing us along the path toward higher [illegible] and greatly enlarged national [illegible]. And why not, if the money is properly expended? Contrast our old [illegible] in 1850 and now. Taxes [illegible] 50 cents on $100, but what did we get for it? Courts [illegible]. Now the taxes are three times as [illegible] and on five or ten times as much [illegible] property, but look what the citizen [illegible] his money—the finest system of [illegible] in the world, with [illegible] bridge over the river and all the [illegible] at every important place; the [illegible] school system in the country, [illegible] that has been taken as a model [illegible] new states and even by the District of Columbia, and a hundred other [illegible]." [Here Mr. Cannon told several [illegible] of the mud roads of his [illegible] and laughed most heartily at the [illegible] tion.] "Why, the citizen gets [illegible] three times as much for each dollar [illegible] in taxes as in 1850. Now it is [illegible] practicable that the United States [illegible] do the same, for, though it is a government of limited powers, within [illegible] sphere it is supreme. That gives us the power we want as to navy and [illegible] defenses—South Africa and the [illegible] near to us, the Nicaragua canal [illegible] the rest—and I am very decided [illegible] bold and vigorous policy, believing [illegible] to be far more economical in the [illegible]

Mr. Cannon directed me to [illegible] rious and interesting points [illegible] of the committee on appropriations and by the courtesy of the [illegible] Mr. James C. Courts, I was [illegible] pass a very pleasant afternoon [illegible] survey. It is an odd fact [illegible] that this committee has had [illegible] chief clerks in the 31 years of [illegible] ence. The first was Robert J. [illegible] of California, who held control [illegible] 18 years, and was succeeded [illegible] Courts of Tennessee, who [illegible] 12 years as chief and had [illegible] been Mr. Stevens' assistant [illegible] The latter was a Republican [illegible] Courts is a Democrat, civil service having held from the start [illegible] Thad Stevens, as [illegible] the first chairman, and was [illegible] turn by Washburn of Illinois [illegible] Massachusetts and Garfield [illegible] Then came the political [illegible] 1874, and the Democrat [illegible] were Randall, Holman and [illegible] Atkins of Tennessee. [illegible] Republican, followed [illegible] again, then Cannon in the [illegible] Holman in the Fifty-second [illegible] Texas in the Fifty-third [illegible] again in the present house [illegible] on the committee for 14 years [illegible] started with the Forty-sixth [illegible] but lost his seat in the Fifty [illegible]

AT CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Interest in the Revival Services Continues Unabated.

The usual large audience greeted Evangelist Lhamon last night at the Christian church. As usual there were confessions. With this church a confession means an addition. Mr Lhamon says that confession and baptism is matriculation in the school of Christ, and that graduation with its commencement day comes when we go out into the higher world.

Last night Mr Lhamon's subject was "The Apostolic Conversions. He showed that conversion is just simply turning to Christ. There is nothing mysterious about it. If you are on the wrong road stop and turn back. You do not have to go in a penitential way for weeks. Christ receives you when you receive Him. You receive Him upon evidence, just as you receive anything else in the world. When you believe that Christ is your savior and that God is your Father, turn round and say so. That is conversion. Say so bravely and publicly and in the waters of baptism, and then keep on saying so in the way you live and as long as you live. That is salvation.

Preaching and teaching, faith, repentance, baptism, and a Christly life—these are the biblical steps into heaven.

Mr. Lhamon showed by the aid of his chart that in every described case of conversion in the Bible baptism is named: that the apostles considered it the climax of conversion; and that in what Dr. Philip Schaff, most learned of Presbyterians, called its 'original, normal form"—namely, immersion—it is a solemn and sweet and beautiful reminder of Christ's burial and resurrection.

Tonight his subject will be "The One Mighty to Save."

RAILROAD NOTES

John St. Germain, of the C and E. clerical force, is taking a lay off

The C. H. V. and T. has arranged to run a theatrical train from Fostoria to Toledo Saturday.

Effective February 15 mileage of the Zanesville and Ohio River will be honored on the C., S. and H.

The Big Four earnings for the third week in January show the following increase: 1896, $246,268; 1895, 236,581; increase, $9,685.

The Erie yards are still crowded with cars. Last week an average of one thousand cars were handled per day here, and this week the average will amount to more than that.

Columbus Dispatch: C., H. V. and T. mail car No. 1, which was recently overhauled, has been put on trains 32 and 35. The mail has been so heavy on this run that the mail room in the car before it was remodeled was not large enough. The mail room has been enlarged and equipped with the latest style mail equipment, making this car one of the best running into Columbus. The car has ample room for two clerks to work and the conveniences are highly appreciated by the railway mail service.

Columbus Journal: The question of rates for parties of ten or more on one solid ticket over the trunk lines has not yet been settled by the board of control of the Joint Traffic association. All the passenger representatives of the through lines in the Central Traffic territory, with the exception of the Baltimore and Ohio, claim to have been notified that no special rate for parties of this kind was authorized and as a result full fare would have to be charged. The Baltimore and Ohio claims that the rate of 2 cents a mile for parties of ten or more was practically an established rate and was filed with the interstate commerce commission as such. On the other hand, the Pennsylvania and other roads affirm that the rate was a special one, being identical with the special rate to clergymen, which expired at the time the Joint Traffic association came into control of the Central Traffic and Trunk Line association territory. The Baltimore and Ohio having declared the special rate to clergymen to be ineffective now, the other lines claim that under the same rule the special rate to parties should also be declared void. The question is one of great importance and the decision of the board of control is awaited with much interest.

A GRATIFYING WORK

PERFOMED BY THE CONFERENCE OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The Thought and Substance Entire of Rev. Nicklas' Paper on the Christian Science Theory Will Have a Place in the Church Journals.

The session of the eastern conference of the northern district of the Lutheran church, which just closed here, proved to be the most profitable one that has ever been held. The questions discussed by the ministers were all of vital importance to the church. The entire session was a busy one. Each day the work was commenced early and continued until night, and the conference accomplished much business.

REV. A. L. NICKLAS.

Wednesday afternoon the paper of Rev. A. L. Nicklas took up the entire session. The outline of this essay was given in the STAR of Wednesday, and after it had been fully discussed was adopted by the unanimous vote of the conference, and is to appear in full in the Lutheran magazines. The paper is one that shows much thought and is a treaties on the Christian Science theory. It speaks of its origin and gives the subject very thoughtful treatment. Its entire adoption by the conference is a very flattering compliment to Marion's talented and able young minister.

After Rev. Nicklas had finished the pastors repaired to the parsonage, where a short business session was held. The secret business of the conference was transacted at this meeting, and after its close some returned to their homes, but the majority remained over to hear the eloquent English sermon delivered by Rev. Sutter, of Galion. There was a large congregation present to hear the able divine.

The next conference is to be held at Arlington, Ohio, some time in May, but the exact date has not been settled upon. The ministers left Marion feeling very much gratified over their treatment here.

OLD SPECTACLE GAME

Such as the Ancients Used To Work, Inflicted on Caledonians.

The Caledonia Enterprise says:

One day last week three doughty rag buyers struck Caledonia and proceeded to gather up the rags and old rubber boots and shoes from the good housewives of the town. Incidentally they had a little side issue that they worked with some success. One entered a house and stated that he had found a pair of gold spectacles in the rags bought at another town and desired to sell them. He only asked $1.50 for them but would take what he could get, in some instances but 50 cents being secured.

This scheme was worked pretty generally all over town. How many pairs they succeeded in selling is not known, but a couple have been reported. The game is so old that the Enterprise weeps at its being successfully played in Caledonia. Such swindlers buy the spectacles usually at $1 a dozen pairs, but some are generous enough to give their victims a better grade, paying say $1 20 a dozen.

THIS IS NO FAKE.

COMMON PLEAS COURT

Crissinger & Quigley today filed in the court of common pleas a petition for A. D. Littler against George E. Her, Edward Burke and William Randall.

The plaintiff says that June 15, 1895, he entered into a verbal agreement with the defendants by the terms of which he was to furnish his team and his service in driving the team for the defendants through the summer season of 1895, for which he was to receive $12 per week and all expenses.

The plaintiff says that pursuant to said agreement he entered into the employ of the defendants and from June 17 to August 31, a period of eleven weeks, his services thus amounting to $132, upon which the defendants have paid $61 90, leaving a balance of $70 20.

As a second cause of action the plaintiff sets up an account against the defendants for $2 for drayage and for a third cause of action an account of $82 20 purchased from F. E. Owens for balance due on contract for teaming and as a fourth cause of action a like account purchased of L. M. Holverstott for $96, making the amount due him on the four causes of action $250-40, for which he asks judgment.

Ned Burke, in speaking of the above case to the STAR, says that the case is the result of a misunderstanding and that it was supposed by him that Mr Rose, late manager of Her, Burke & Randall, had settled the claims of the teamsters. A settlement will probably be reached as soon as Mr. Rose is heard from.

At the October term, 1882, of the court of common pleas, Maria E. Young secured a decree of divorce against her husband, Enoch H. Young, but inadvertently a journal entry of the finding was never placed on record.

Shortly after Mrs. Young married and nothing more was thought of the matter until a few days ago when Mr. Young called at the clerk's office and inquired if his wife had secured a divorce.

The clerk said that no journal entry appeared to indicate that she had and so she came in today and paid up the costs and had a nunc pro tunc order issued.

SERIES OF GAMES

Will Be Played by Local Polo Teams, Beginning Next Week.

The lovers of polo will have an opportunity to witness a fine series of games, commencing Tuesday night of next week. Polo is beginning to gain prominence in the city again, and the crowds at the last few games this season are evidence of that fact.

The present team representing the People's rink will play a series of games with the old Columbia team, consisting of Fred Lutz, Roll Thompson, James Beatty and Tracey Allen, with Harry Thomas as substitute. The winning club is to receive thirty per cent of the receipts. Five games are to be played and the victory will be battled for in three games out of five.

The first of the series will be played on next Tuesday evening, and both teams are practicing for the game.

Dr. Talmage's Story of Grady.

When Dr. T. De Witt Talmage was in Atlanta recently, he told the following anecdote of Henry W. Grady, the famous Atlanta editor.

"Grady said to me one day, while speaking of journalism, that he made it a rule never to correct mistakes and to run The Constitution on the policy that no mistakes were made. At least he would never acknowledge one. One day Grady said an obituary appeared in his columns of a man tolerably well known. The dead man appeared the next day and demanded a correction, saying he was not dead, and that the obituary was all a mistake. Grady said he never made mistakes and never corrected errors. The dead man that was insisted in saying he was alive and wanted it understood. Grady then told him that the only thing he could possibly do would be to place him in the birth column as a new arrival."—Atlanta Constitution.

CHAPTER XIII

MR. BARNES GOES SOUTH

Mr. Barnes now began some researches into the past history of Mr Alphonse Thauret Obtaining the date of his first registry at the Hoffman House, he found that to be about a month before the train robbery occurred Finding the expressman, who had brought his baggage to the hotel, it transpired that it had been taken from an English steamship, yet the name Thauret did not appear upon the list of passengers As it was certain, however, that the man must have arrived by the ship it was evident that Thauret was an alias. Mr. Barnes copied the ship's list for future reference A search for the name Rose Mitchel was fruitless, though extended to the passenger lists of all arriving steamers for two months prior to the murder

Believing that Mr Thauret must have some communication with foreign friends and hoping to obtain some clew by the postmarks of any such letters, Mr. Barnes arranged an espionage of the man's mail But though the hotel clerk reported to him daily for several weeks there was not one foreign letter As to money, Mr Thauret appeared to be well supplied, paying his board bills promptly with checks upon a neighboring national bank, in which it was ascertained that he had deposited to his credit several thousand dollars

Thus after a long investigation Mr Barnes was chagrined to admit that he had discovered nothing save that Mr. Thauret had come across the ocean under an assumed name, and even this meager knowledge was a mere matter of inference.

Though baffled in this direction Mr. Barnes had been more successful in another effort which he essayed This was a line of investigation which he inaugurated hoping to discover the whereabouts of the child Rose Mitchel, who was so skillfully kept in hiding He had first instructed Lucette as to the part she was to play, and that young woman, anxious once more to stand well with her employer, had exerted herself to her utmost, entirely succeeding in her mission. This was to obtain some of the writing of the child. "Go to the house again," Mr. Barnes had suggested, "and get into conversation with that same servant who met you at the door on your first visit. Then in some manner obtain a specimen of the child's writing An old copybook would be just the thing." Lucette carried out these instructions to the letter, and by bribing the servant girl at the school obtained exactly what the detective had suggested, a copybook in which little Rose Mitchel had practiced writing

Armed with this, and selecting a specimen which seemed best suited to his purpose, Mr Barnes next bribed the mailboy at the Fifth Avenue hotel to examine all letters addressed to Mitchel until he should find one in the same hand It was not until early in March that this patient work resulted in success. Then one day the boy reported to Mr. Barnes that the expected letter had at length arrived The postmark indicated that it had been mailed at East Orange, N. J

"So that is where the little bird is hidden," said Mr. Barnes to himself when this information reached him Summoning Lucette, he sent her to East Orange with these instructions

"Now, my girl, I'll give you another chance to redeem yourself. You are to go to East Orange and find that child The most promising plan is through the postoffice. I will give you a note to the postmaster that will aid you Should a letter be sent to the child either by Mitchel himself or by Miss Remsen, you will learn of it through the postmaster The rest of course will be simple."

"But suppose," said Lucette, "that the child's letters are directed under cover to the parties with whom she is living What then?"

"Why, stupid, that is what I send you down there for As the postmaster is an acquaintance of mine I could get the address, should it reach him, without having you there. But that is only a faint hope We know that the child is in East Orange East Orange has just so many houses You must examine every one, if necessary Now go and if you don't find the child I have no further need of you I give you this commission partly as a chance to redeem your other mistake and partly because you have seen the child once and could recognize her"

"I'll find her," said Lucette, and she departed.

A week later Mr Barnes was in New Orleans where he devoted himself to discovering, if possible, the early histories of Mr Mitchel and the murdered woman Weeks passed, and he made no progress

One morning in the latter part of April he was feeling somewhat despondent over his ill success, when, as he glanced listlessly through The Picayune the following paragraph caught his eye

"Mr Barnes the celebrated New York detective, is in the city and stopping at the St Charles hotel It is believed that he is in search of a desperate criminal and probably the news loving world will soon be treated to one of the famous detective's clever elucidations of some mysterious crime"

This both annoyed and puzzled Mr Barnes He did not [illegible] any one has [illegible] reporters [illegible] his identity While he was [illegible] thinking [illegible] a card was brought to him which bore the name, "Richard Sefton"

He directed that the gentleman should be shown to his room, and soon after a man of about 35 with dark complexion, black hair and keen hazel eyes, entered, bowing politely and saying

"This is Mr. Barnes, I believe"

"Be seated, Mr Sefton" said Mr Barnes coldly, "and then tell me why you believe me to be Mr Barnes, when I registered as James [illegible]ton"

"I do not believe [illegible] Mr Barnes," said the caller [illegible] himself "[illegible] was inaccurate [illegible] expression. I know that you are Mr Barnes"

"Oh! You do! And how [illegible] you know that I am Mr Barnes?"

"Because it is my business to know people I am a detective like [illegible] I have come to help you"

"You have come to help [illegible] very kind, I am sure But since [illegible] so very clever, perhaps you [illegible] mind telling me how you [illegible] need help and in what [illegible]"

"With pleasure You [illegible] because, pardon my saying it, you are working on a case in which time is precious to you and you have already wasted about six weeks I [illegible], because you have learned nothing that will aid you in your search."

"In my search for what?"

"Mr Barnes you are not too cordial There should be some fraternal courtesy between us I have come to you as a friend honestly wishing to aid you I have known that you were in the city for some time I have heard of you, of course Who in our business has not? Therefore I have spent a great deal of spare time watching you I did so simply to notice and perhaps to learn something from your methods In this way I became acquainted with the fact first, that you are interested in the name Mitchel, and, secondly in the name Leroy I have simply put the two together and jumped to the conclusion that you are trying to learn something about Leroy Mitchel Am I right?"

"Before I reply to you, Mr. Sefton, I must have more assurance of your good will and responsibility How do I know that you are a detective at all?"

"Quite right! Here is my badge I am in the department here"

"Very well so far, but now how can you prove that you have any good reason for assisting me?"

"You are a hard man to help, I declare Why, what object but a friendly one can I have?"

"I am not prepared to answer that at present. Perhaps I shall be able to do so later"

"Oh, very well! You can look me up all you want to I can stand it, I assure you. But, really, I did want to help though of course I have no right to intrude As you say you do not need me, why I"—

"I did not say that I would not accept your aid You must not think me ungracious I am simply a detective, and careful from habit I certainly should not speak confidentially to a man that I meet for the first time, and so disclose any of my own purposes But it is different with you You must have had a definite idea by which you expect to give me assistance or you would not have come here. If you are earnest and honest, I see no reason why you should not disclose the main purpose of your visit at once"

"If only to prove my honesty I will do so I believe you are looking for Leroy Mitchel If so I can tell you how to find him in a few hours, or, at the worst, in a day or two"

"You know of a Leroy Mitchel who is now in this city?"

"I do He is over in Algiers, a worker in one of the carhouses He is a common, drunken brute, and that is the only reason why there would be any difficulty about finding him When he is sober, he is easy to see, but as soon as he gets some money he is off on another spree"

"Do you know of a woman of the name of Rose Mitchel?"

"Certainly—that is, I did know such a woman once. But she has not been in New Orleans for years At one time any one could have given you her address I see now that this man is the one whom you want, for once he passed as this woman's husband."

"You are sure of this?"

"Positive"

"When and where can I see this man?"

"He works in the shops of the Louisiana and Texas railroad over in Algiers You can find him through the foreman"

"Mr Sefton, it may be that you have given me information which will be of service to me If so, you will not regret it I will myself examine into the matter For the present, if I do not make a confidant of you you must attribute it to caution rather than to distrust"

"Oh, I am not easily offended I would act in the same manner in your place But you will find that I am your friend You can count on me to aid you on demand I won't trouble you again till you send for me A note to headquarters will reach me quickest Good morning"

"Good morning, Mr Sefton, and thank you" Mr Barnes extended his hand feeling that perhaps he had been unnecessarily discourteous

Mr Sefton took it with that genial smile of friendship so common to the native southerner

Left alone Mr Barnes at once prepared for a trip to Algiers determined not to let a clew [illegible] be lost. He reached the shops just after the men had knocked off for luncheon The foreman, however told him that Leroy Mitchel had been at work in the morning, so he waited patiently

When the men came back to resume work the foreman pointed out a man who he said was Leroy Mitchel The [illegible] with a [illegible] face and [illegible] he was a [illegible] man [illegible] had sunk so low [illegible] evidence of it [illegible] Mr Barnes went up to him and asked when he could [illegible]

"Now, what [illegible]," returned the man [illegible].

"What do you mean?" asked the detective.

"Just what I say," said the other "We get our pay here by the hour, and if you want my time, why, you'll have to pay for it at union rates" And he laughed as though a good joke had been propounded

"Then," said Mr Barnes, taking in the kind of a man with whom he had to deal, "I'll engage you on a job that I have for you and pay you double wages as long as I keep you."

"Now you are talking" said the fellow "Where'll we go?"

"I think I'll take you to my hotel" And thither they proceeded Up in his own room again Mr Barnes felt at ease, while his companion certainly made himself comfortable, selecting a rocking chair and putting his feet up on the window sill

"Now then," began Mr Barnes, "I want to ask you a few questions Are you prepared to answer them?"

"That will depend on what they are If you are going to ask impertinent questions or ones that I think I ought to get more than double wages for answering—why, I am with you"

"In the first place, then are you willing to say whether you ever knew a woman who called herself Rose Mitchel?"

"Well, [illegible] I lived with her till she broke up"

"Do you know where she is now?"

"I don't and I don't care to"

"[illegible] I [illegible] tell you that she [illegible] and that she had left $100,000 [illegible]"

The man jumped to his feet as though shot and stood staring at the detective He gave a long, low whistle, and a keen, tricky gleam came into his eye, which Mr Barnes noted At length he spoke

"Are you giving me this straight?"

"I am telling you the truth The woman is dead, and that amount of property is where I can get it for the man who can prove that he is entitled to it."

"And who would that be?" He waited eagerly for the reply, and Mr Barnes saw that he was playing trump cards.

"Why Mr. Mitchel, that is what I am down here for You see, I thought the party would be willing to pay me a good commission for proving him the heir, and that is why I am hunting him up I started out with the idea that I might find her husband He would have a claim."

"I see" Saying which, he sat down and seemed lost in thought. The detective deemed it well to wait for him to speak again, which he did.

"See here," he exclaimed. "How much do you want for getting this money for me?"

"I cannot get it at all unless you are the woman's husband," replied the detective.

"Well, I am her husband. Didn't I tell you I lived with her till she broke up?"

"Yes, but are you legally married to her?"

"Why, to be sure. Don't I tell you I am her husband?"

"Then, in the name of the law, I arrest you," said Mr Barnes, suddenly rising and standing over the man

"Arrest me," said the fellow, jumping up, pale with fright. "What for?"

"Rose Mitchel has been murdered, and the man who killed her has confessed that he was hired to do it by you."

"He's a blasted liar"

"I hope so for your sake But as you admit that you are her husband, you are the man we are looking for. I'll have to take you to New York."

"But, I say," said the fellow, now thoroughly alarmed, "there is a big mistake here I've been lying to you, I'm not the woman's husband, and my name is not Mitchel."

"That won't do, my man I had you pointed out to me by Sefton, the detective here"

"But he is the very man that hired me to pass off as Mitchel to you."

Mr Barnes chuckled as he found his ruse successful. He had suspected all along that the New Orleans detective was trying to lead him off on a wrong scent and now thought he saw a chance to turn the tables upon him and get some valuable information.

"That is a very thin story," said he, "but if you will tell me all you know, perhaps I may believe you"

"You bet I'll give you the whole story straight to get out of this scrape In the first place, my name is Arthur Chambers I was up in the world once, had money and was respectable. But drink changed all that. Now anybody can buy me for a few dollars, and that is what Sefton did. He came to me about a week ago and told me that a detective was down here from up north [illegible] around for this Mitchel. He said it was important to an employer of his [illegible] New York to have this detective [illegible] off, that he was hired to do it, and to [illegible] him lose time, that time, in [illegible] way was an important item."

"You say," interrupted Mr. Barnes, "that Sefton told you he was hired by some one in New York to throw me off [illegible]"

"That's what he said," replied Chambers. Mr Barnes easily guessed who was employing Sefton, and once more he paid the tribute of admiration for the cautious and ingenious scheming of Mr Mitchel

"Go on," said the detective

"There ain't much more to tell Sefton hired me to play off that I was Mitchel, and he gave me a cock and bull yarn to feed you with about a woman named Rose Mitchel"

"What was that story"

"Say, look here," said Chambers, his effrontery and cunning returning as he felt himself out of danger of arrest "You don't want that fairy tale You would rather have the true story, wouldn't you?"

"Certainly"

"Well I'm an old timer I am. There [illegible] that's happened in the Crescent city I couldn't remember if I was [illegible]"

"[illegible] then You are [illegible] dealing with Sefton [illegible] You tell me what I want to know, and if I find it is true I'll pay you for it. But if you play any tricks, I'll make it warm for you."

"That's all right. Suppose I begin by telling you that this Rose Mitchel, that you say was murdered, was known down here chiefly as Rose Montalbon. La Montalbon, she was generally called."

"La Montalbon!" repeated Mr. Barnes. "Then was she an actress?"

"Actress? Well, I guess she was, considerable But not on the stage. No, she kept a gambling den on Royal street. Fitted up like a palace, too, and many a young fool has lost his last dime in that house."

"But what about Mitchel? Do you know whether he was connected with her in any way?"

"I can't give you that dead straight. There was some mystery there. I used to go to the Royal street place, and I knew Mitchel in a sort of way. He was always hanging around there Then there was a while that he didn't show up, and then he turned up again and was introduced as La Montalbon's husband There was a story going that he had married another girl and deserted her—a young creole, I think, though I never heard her name"

"Did you know anything about a child, a girl?"

"That was another queer part of it. There was a girl, little Rosy Some said it was the creole's, but La Montalbon always claimed it was hers."

"What became of Mitchel?"

"About a year after he passed as La Montalbon's husband he skipped out—vanished. Several years after that there was another sensation The child was kidnaped La Montalbon offered big rewards to recover her, but she never did Then about three years ago her place began to run down; she lost money, and finally she, too, disappeared."

"If this story is true, it may be quite important. Do you think you could identify this man Mitchel?"

"Well, I don't know for certain. But, see here, come to think of it, there were two Mitchels, and both named Leroy too"

"Are you sure of that?"

"Pretty sure They were cousins. The other fellow was younger I didn't know him myself. He was a Young Men's Christian association sort of a boy, and not quite in my line. But I sort of remember hearing that he was in love with the creole girl. But, say, I'll tell you who can give it to you straight as a shingle"

"Ah, who is that?"

"An old man named Neuilly. He knew all about the creole, and so must know about the Mitchels. I think he was in La Montalbon's power. She knew something about him and blackmailed him, as she did lots of others. Now that she is dead you might make him open his mouth"

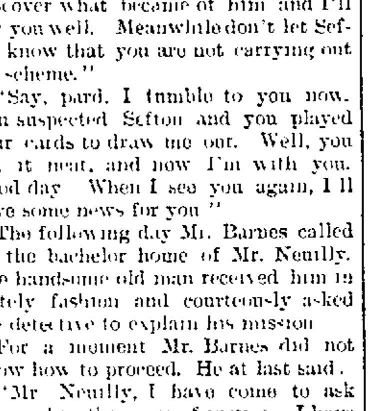
"Very good Get me his address, and then see what you can find out about the other Leroy Mitchel, the good boy. Discover what became of him and I'll pay you well. Meanwhile don't let Sefton know that you are not carrying out his scheme."

"Say, pard, I tumble to you now. You suspected Sefton and you played your cards to draw me out. Well, you did it neat, and now I'm with you. Good day When I see you again, I'll have some news for you"

The following day Mr. Barnes called at the bachelor home of Mr. Neuilly. The handsome old man received him in stately fashion and courteously asked the detective to explain his mission

For a moment Mr. Barnes did not know how to proceed. He at last said.

"Mr Neuilly, I have come to ask your aid in the cause of justice I have hesitated to do this, not wishing to disturb you. That I do so now is due to the fact that every other resource has been tried and has failed me."



"Suppose I were to tell you that she is dead!"

"Proceed, sir," said the host, with a courteous bow

"I am seeking certain information about a woman who was known as La Montalbon, and"— An instantaneous change came over the face of Mr Neuilly His hospitable smile of welcome vanished He rose erect and stiffly said.

"I know nothing of that woman, and must wish you a very good morning," with which he deliberately began to walk from the room Mr Barnes for a moment was nonplused, but saw that he must act quickly or lose all chance of gaining any information from this man.

"One moment, Mr Neuilly," he said. "You certainly would not refuse to help me convict her murderer" As he expected, the last word brought him back.

"Murderer? Did you mean to intimate that she has been murdered?" Saying this he stopped for a second, and then slowly returned and sat down again

"Rose Montalbon was murdered in New York some months ago I believe that I am on the track of the guilty man Will you aid me?"

"That depends upon circumstances You say the woman is dead. That alters my position in this matter very much. I had reasons, good ones to me for refusing to converse with you on this subject. But if the woman is dead the objections vanish" Mr Barnes thought he understood Here was one of those whom she had been ruled by fear, as Chambers had said

"What I want from you, Mr Neuilly, is very simple. You either can or you cannot give me the information that I wish. Did you know a man named Leroy Mitchel who was at one time this woman's husband?"

"I knew him very well. He was a scoundrel of the worst sort for all that he had the manners of the polished gentleman"

"Do you know what became of him?"

"No He left this city suddenly and has never returned"

"Did you know little Rose Mitchel?"

"Many a time has she sat upon my knee This man was her father. He wronged one of the sweetest little girls that ever lived."

"You knew the girl? Knew her name?"

"I did"

"What was it?"

"That is a secret I have guarded for too many years to be willing to yield it now to a stranger You must show me good reason for giving it to you before I tell it"

"I will explain This man Mitchel is now in New York He is about to marry a sweet, good woman Yet I think that he murdered Rose Montalbon, or Mitchel, to get her out of his way. I think that she was blackmailing him Besides, he has the child with him.

Mr. Neuilly started up and paced the room for some time, much agitated Finally he stopped and said

"You say he has the child with him?"

"Yes. Here is her likeness" He handed Mr Neuilly the photograph made by Lucette

Mr. Neuilly looked at it, muttered "Very like, very like!" then remained silent for some moments, finally he said.

"And you think he murdered this woman, Montalbon?"

"I do"

"It would be terrible to hang that child's father What dishonor! What dishonor! But justice is justice!" He seemed to be talking rather to himself than to Mr. Barnes. Suddenly he turned and said

"I cannot tell you the name for which you ask. But I will go with you to New York, and if this story of yours is true I will move heaven and earth to see justice done That villain must not ruin another young life"

"Good," exclaimed the detective, delighted with the result of his visit.

"One more point, Mr. Neuilly. What do you know of the existence of another Mr. Leroy Mitchel?"

"I never met him, though I knew of him There was a mystery about that which I never could unravel I think that he loved this same girl At any rate, shortly after she died he lost his reason, and is now in an insane asylum Of course he cannot help us"

Mr. Barnes, after arranging where to meet Mr Neuilly, returned to the St Charles to make his own preparations for going north. Up in his room he found Chambers awaiting him

"Well," said the detective, "what have you learned?"

"Nothing that will please you, I am sorry to say Only I have found the other Mitchel. He is a lunatic in an asylum out in the suburbs But the fellow up north is your man sure This one, they say, went crazy because his sweetheart gave him the mitten."

"Did you find out the woman's name?"

"I could not do that It seems as carefully hidden as though it was a state secret That gives you an insight into what the creole pride is."

"Very well I think you have worked for me faithfully Here is a $100 bill Will that satisfy you?"

"Perfectly I wish you luck."

An hour later a telegram was handed to Mr Barnes, which read:

Have found the child. LUCETTE

In the afternoon Mr Barnes started for New York accompanied by Mr Neuilly That same night Mr. Robert Leroy Mitchel received a telegram which read

Barnes off for New York Has old Neuilly with him If the last named knows anything, you must be careful SEFTON

After reading this Mr Mitchel completed his toilet, used the dispatch to light a cigarette and then took his fiancee to the opera

Discovery of a New Titian.

A puritanical policeman at Bern has rendered a service to posterity In a secondhand furniture shop in one of those mediaeval and mysterious arcaded streets that slope toward the Aarbrucke the gendarme observed an obscure canvas, and through the crust of dirt and smoke which had gathered on it he was just able to make out that it was a nude. "A pagan, I am sorry to say," as Mr Pecksniff once remarked It was a recumbent woman's figure. Her head rested on her right arm, and above her hovered a Cupid Venus and Cupid were at once impounded by the scrupulous-minded gendarme with the remark that the state did not allow frau persons to be exhibited without clothing in the open street.

The frau person attracted attention. She was visited by the directors of the Kunstmuseum and was bought for 40 francs by a Mr Otto Keller. Then the goddess followed exactly the course of action adopted by the real and original Venus centuries ago—she went to Paris to establish her reputation. At Paris, "cleansed from the incrusting dirt which covered it, the picture came out in all the splendor of its beauty, the harmony of outline and the richness of hue which proclaimed the hand of the master." The experts have unanimously declared it a Venus couches by Titian, and a rich American of Chicago, Mr Philip Armour, has offered 200,000 francs for this once despised frau person —Pall Mall Gazette

When she has matured, is married and the center of a household, she grows eager for contact with material luxury whether its possessors meet her approval or not. She yearns for it herself. If she has not money, she claims to have it, lives beyond her means and so becomes fraudulent. It is bad enough to boast of riches, but to assume to have them is beneath contempt. To fawn on riches is the vilest of flunkyism, and many an American woman, in common with the civilized globe, cannot be held innocent of the charge. Happily there are American women and women born in America.

JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE.

MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL.

Winner of a Prize of $3,000 In a Novelette Competition.

The winner of the New York Herald novelette prize competition is Molly Elliot Seawell of Washington. Her reward was a check for $3,000. The story describes the shifts and straits of a couple of students in Paris and details the extraordinary manner in which they lifted themselves to affluence and fame and made friends and adulators of their creditors.

MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL.

Miss Seawell began to write almost from the nursery and was a contributor to periodicals in her teens. Her first signed story was "Maid Marian," which was subsequently dramatized by her for Rosina Vokes and played with success by that actress until her untimely death. She followed this up with other sketches and stories and with the novels of "Throckmorton" (1890) and "Children of Destiny" (1893). The winning of prizes is no novelty to Miss Seawell. Her first story for boys won a prize of $500 offered by The Youth's Companion. So great was the popularity of this story that it was made the first of a series entitled "Young Heroes of Our Navy." The succeeding three volumes were all written by Miss Seawell.

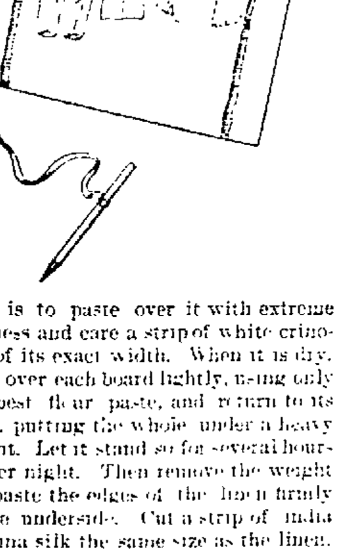
Miss Seawell contributed an article to The Critic in 1891 on "The Creative Faculty In Woman" which created discussion that raged in the magazines for months and was joined in by no less a person than Andrew Lang. Miss Seawell took the negative side of the question. It is certainly odd that the one woman who disbelieves in the creative faculty in woman should take a prize over 1,000 competitors, of whom presumably one-half were men.

The Latest Laundry List.

The material is linen, either white or colored, as you may prefer. The decoration is painted on it after other and more practical parts of the work are done.

To begin aright purchase a set of the printed lists held together with binders' pins. These form the work proper. Then cut two pieces of stiff cardboard slightly larger each way, and a piece of linen as long as the two boards combined, plus 1½ inches and just 1 inch wider than their width.

Lay the linen down smoothly and carefully on a table or board and on it lay the two boards, leaving half an inch between them and allowing the linen to extend half an inch beyond each edge. The space between is to form the back of the book, so the next step in order is to paste over it with extreme neatness and care a strip of white crinoline of its exact width. When it is dry, paste over each board lightly, using only the best flour paste, and return to its place, putting the whole under a heavy weight. Let it stand so for several hours or over night. Then remove the weight and paste the edges of the linen firmly to the underside. Cut a strip of india or china silk the same size as the linen, turn under its edges and paste it with great care over the whole, so as to form a lining to the entire cover. Again put it under a weight to dry.



When it is firm and to your satisfaction, paint on the decoration with water color paints. If you are clever at figures, introduce a Chinaman in his queer gown; if not, use some such device as the one given.

When the cover is complete, pass half inch ribbon through the leaves of the booklet formed by the printed lists and tie it into place. Allow one end of the ribbon to hang to a generous length and tie fast to it a well sharpened pencil.

CLARE BUNCE.

GOOD HEALTH.

Good Effect of Hot Water on a Variety of Ills.

The great utility which M. Reclus, a Paris surgeon, has shown that hot water applications have in many surgical and even medical cases is described in the New York Herald's European edition as really surprising. Hot water baths are particularly useful in the treatment of sprains, where the sprained joint is put in a bandage and massage is employed. The bandage should be elastic. It should not be so tightly applied as to cause the patient discomfort, but should be made to fit snugly about the joint. But it should be removed twice a day, night and morning, and then the hot water brought to bear in the following way: The sprained joint is put in a bath, of which the temperature is gradually raised from 48 to 50, 52 and even 55 degrees C. (131 degrees F.). Under the influence of the heat the pain stops almost immediately, and after an immersion of 10 or 12 minutes the joint is more limber and the movements easier.

But the most important use of hot water made by M. Reclus is in cases of crushed limbs, in which he does not resort to amputation, but subjects the injured limb to a spray of water at a temperature of about 140 degrees F. This method has several advantages, especially those "of being less fatal than the treatment by immediate operation, and of preserving for the patient, if not the whole limb, at any rate a much greater length than would have remained after an amputation."

M. Reclus also finds that hot water has an excellent effect on sluggish wounds, and in sore throats and tonsilitis when gargling with it at a temperature of 130 degrees F. is kept up every hour until the inflammation subsides.

A Cure For Cramp.

Many persons of both sexes are troubled with cramp in one or both of the legs. It usually comes on suddenly, and while it lasts the pain is acute. Most people jump out of bed—the cramp nearly always comes on just after going to bed or while undressing—and either rub their legs or get some one to do it for them. It is said that there is nothing easier than to overcome the spasms, and the method suggested is as follows: Provide a good strong cord. A long garter will do if nothing else is handy. When the cramp comes on, take the cord, wind it around the leg over the place in which the pain is felt and take an end in each hand and give it a sharp pull, one that will hurt a little. The cramp will cease instantly, and the sufferer can go to bed assured that it will not come again that night.

Diphtheria and the Household Cat.

The appearance of diphtheria in families simultaneously with or subsequent to the illness of the cat with what appears to be a throat affection is a matter of medical record. A physician notes a case in which after the death of three cats with throat disease the children who had nursed them immediately developed symptoms of diphtheria.

ETIQUETTE.

What the Bridegroom Wears—Thanks For Presents—Orange Blossoms and Kisses.

The question oftenest asked about the wedding is, "What shall the bridegroom wear?" It is a positive rule that no man puts on a dress coat until the evening, and, no matter how elaborate the bride's toilet may be, the daytime finds him in frock coat and what is known as formal morning dress. It must be remembered that the bridal party no longer have "groomsmen," but instead "ushers." This is of course a mere word difference, but the usage of the right words is an evidence of one's being informed as to all changes in the social world.

Every present requires a note of thanks from the bride. It may be written by her mother or sister if she is very much occupied, but it must be signed with the bride's name. If there is to be a breakfast or reception after the wedding, and some one sends you a present—some one whom you had not expected to ask to the house—an invitation must go to this person. This sounds rather like "for value received," but the giving of gifts is in good society by no means as common as it used to be, and one must be either of the same family or a dear friend to either bride or bridegroom before one can feel that one is entitled to this privilege. Consequently a wedding invitation does not necessitate a present.

In answer to another oft asked question, The Ladies' Home Journal also says that a wedding invitation requires no answer unless there is included an invitation to a sit down breakfast, and then it should be answered as promptly as if it were a dinner invitation. At the same time it must be understood that, though the invitation to the church requires no answer, it is always proper to acknowledge it.

In small places a bride has precedence for three months; in larger cities, where brides are more numerous, for one. During that time she is the guest of honor wherever she may appear, and at dinners is taken in by the host. She may, with propriety, wear her wedding dress, but the orange blossoms must be removed from it and roses or some other flowers substituted. Many dressmakers are now furnishing with the wedding gown a trimming of white roses to take the place of the orange blossoms after the wedding.

Many modest maidens, properly enough, have complained of the indiscriminate kissing to which they have been subjected at their wedding receptions. The best way to get out of this is to suggest to the bridegroom that to the young people he make some tactful remark about the kisses belonging to him, while to the older ones the bride may [illegible] offer her cheek. Among the French a bride is kissed on the forehead, a greeting we might, with propriety, copy.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

How Tommy Tomkins Played at Soldier When Short of Men.

It is not very easy to play at soldiers when you are short of men, as Tom Tomkins was. But Tom was not easily discouraged. He lived in a lonely part of the country, far away from other houses, so he and his brother James had to make all the fun for themselves. Tom had been to the nearest town and had seen a number of soldiers drawn up in line being drilled by an officer. When he returned home, he determined to form a regiment and be its captain.

"Now, James, you must be the bugler and flag bearer, and we will march round the house and get our soldiers together."

So away they went, James blowing a penny trumpet and waving an old red handkerchief tied to a long stick. But no recruits came, so Fido, the dog, was enlisted and made to follow the flag. This was easily done, as Fido was usually to be found following one of the two boys. Puss was tried, but she objected. Then James got his old wooden horse, and it followed in the rear by means of a piece of string attached to its head. Then all marched into the drill-ground, and Tom put his soldiers through their drill.

"NOW, ATTENTION!"

"Now, attention!" Fido took no notice of this order, except to wag his tail. "Stand straight!" was the next command, and Fido rose upon his hind legs and looked at his young master. "Eyes right! Now, Master Bugler, your eyes are wrong. March!" And away they went round the house, with trumpet blowing, flag waving, Fido barking and Tom singing a merry tune. They marched so well that Captain Tom promised to take them out again another day.

A Reformed Character.

And as he pondered on the past he felt inclined to weep.
"My conduct isn't nice," he said, "and it appears to me
That I might easily behave with less ferocitee.

"I'm far too ready with my claws, and when I meet a friend
The chance encounter in a row is almost sure to end.
Well, well, such wicked strife shall cease; I'll neither scratch nor bite,
And nothing shall induce me to be party to a fight.

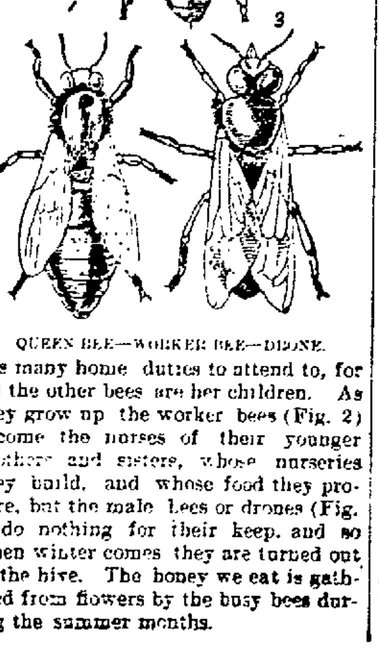
"A lamblike disposition I will henceforth cultivate,
And if a dog should bark at me I won't retaliate.
To totally reform my life is my ambition's sum;
I've been a badger long enough, a goodger I'll become."

A Sensible Bear.

As every one knows, the bear is an animal that lends itself well to being tamed. A Norwegian possessed one which he had trained to accompany him on his journeys by sledge, the creature standing on the back, just like a footman behind a carriage. Bruin had an excellent notion of keeping his balance, for when the sledge gave a lurch to one side the bear at once threw his weight to the opposite side and so prevented a capsize. One day it pleased his master to take the animal over the roughest possible ground, merely to test its skill in this respect. The bear, however, was not to be thrown off. Still it did not relish the ride, and becoming irritated by the constant joltings and swayings to and fro it at length brought its owner to his senses by dealing him a sound whack across his back.

A Chat About Bees.

I suppose every reader has read or heard at some time or other a little about beehives and honey making, but he has never perhaps had his attention called to the three kinds of occupants of the beehive. The queen bee (Fig. 1) is the mother of the hive and has many home duties to attend to, for all the other bees are her children. As they grow up the worker bees (Fig. 2) become the nurses of their younger brothers and sisters, whose nurseries they build, and whose food they procure, but the male bees or drones (Fig. 3) do nothing for their keep, and so when winter comes they are turned out of the hive. The honey we eat is gathered from flowers by the busy bees during the summer months.



QUEEN BEE—WORKER BEE—DRONE.

AN AGED SKATER'S DEFI.

William J. Weeks, Seventy-four Years Old, Sends Out a Sweeping Challenge.

About the first of every year, when the lakes and ponds are covered with a good thickness of hard, smooth ice, William J. Weeks of Yaphank, N. Y., who is now past 74 years of age, sends out a sweeping and world inclusive challenge to skaters. Mr. Weeks is something of a poet, and last year submitted to the skating world his annual message of defiance in this form:

In this year of '95
Is there any man alive
Of seventy years or more
To skate with one of seventy-four?
Or any one of lesser age
In joyful contest to engage,
And skate—in letters clear and bold—
Words, names or phrases as he's told
Then come, that all the world may see
Who'll prove the better man to be.

This year, however, his challenge is in prose and is to the effect that he will meet any person 70 years of age or upward in a skating contest, from 50 to 500 miles, allowing his competitor one mile in every ten. In the matter of speed and distance he has to draw the line at the age of 70, but in fancy skating and delineating on the ice he is ready to meet all comers regardless of age or any other condition. He is desirous of meeting some one who wishes to skate any words or sentences in the English language, celerity of execution and symmetry of form to be requisite features.

Mr. Weeks takes especial pleasure when the ice is perfectly clear and smooth in skating the Ten Commandments, which contain 1,200 letters, all of which he delineates so perfectly that all can read them.

In delineating the name of an individual every letter is as clear cut and bold as though executed with a pen in the hands of an expert. The ordinary fancy skater is not to be compared to Mr. Weeks. The outer edge, the inner curve, the figure 8 and other fancy figures which so many skaters find so fascinating but difficult of execution require but little attention from him. His specialty is in much finer and more difficult work.

WILLIAM J. WEEKS.

At no time during the past 60 years has Mr. Weeks failed to enjoy this healthful and invigorating sport, and now, after three-quarters of a century of life, he is nearly as active and agile as a boy. He has frequently issued his challenges, but as yet has found no one approaching his own age who is ready to meet him in a skating contest, even under the great handicap he places upon himself, nor has any one yet proved his master in fancy skating and delineation.

Mr. Weeks is not only an expert on the ice, but of late has taken a great interest in bicycles and is now an enthusiastic rider. He recently made a tour across Long Island on his wheel. He is considered the best all around athlete of his age in the country and has always been very fond of outdoor sports. He was a member of the class of '44 of Yale, and to him belongs the distinction of having formed the first boat crew at Yale. It was in the spring of 1843. He purchased in New York a Whitehall boat, 19 feet long, and took it with him on his return to New Haven, where he induced six of his classmates to join him in forming a boat club. The boat was named Pioneer, and the crew the Pioneers. This was the origin of the Yale navy. The Pioneers made excursions to all parts of the north side of Long Island sound, and on one occasion rowed across to the Long Island shore.

When a student, young Weeks walked from New Haven to Boston in the month of January, a distance of 140 miles. He started with a companion, who abandoned the tramp before reaching Hartford, and Weeks completed the balance of the trip alone. Returning, he carried a grip weighing 12 pounds, but this did not prevent him from walking 35 miles in nine hours, including a halt of 30 minutes for dinner.

One Armed Champion Tennis Player.

The champion lady tennis player of New Zealand is Miss Hilda Hitchings. Her performances are remarkable in view of the fact that she was born with only one arm. With the left hand she holds the racket with three fingers and the ball with the remaining finger and thumb. A slight toss of the ball, followed by a smart, twisty tap with the racket, results in a fast, low service which her opponents have found anything but easy to take. Miss Hitchings is described as 5 feet 11 inches in height, of lithe figure, commanding reach and active movement, which physical qualities, added to accurate placing, won for her the gold champion cup of 1895.

Zimmerman's Useful Ears.

An Australian paper, the Sydney Bulletin, after remarking that Arthur A. Zimmerman's great success as a cyclist was generally attributed to his large heart, concluded as follows: "It is strange no mention is made of another not unimportant feature in Zim's success—viz, his large and fanlike ears. When Zim was racing in Adelaide, the writer was particularly struck with this peculiarity and calculates that the American is at least two seconds to the mile quicker, owing solely to the ingenious way he assists his machine by working his ears windmill fashion."

Man's Weakest Time.

According to experiments with the dynamometer, a man is precisely at his weakest when he turns out of bed. Our muscular force is greatly increased by breakfast, but it attains to its highest point after the midday meal. It then sinks for a few hours, rises again toward evening, but steadily declines from night to morning. The chief foes of muscular force are overwork and idleness.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the general public.

This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

IT IS A GREAT REMEDY FOR THE CURE OF

Nervousness,
Nervous Prostration,
Nervous Headache,
Sick Headache,
Female Weakness,
Nervous Chills,

Chronic Diarrhœa,
Delicate and Scrofulous Children,
Summer Complaint of Infants.

All these and many other complaints cured by this wonderful Nervine Tonic.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of, but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARPER, Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

REBECCA WILKINSON, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I had been in a distressed condition for three years from Nervousness, Weakness of the Stomach, Dyspepsia, and Indigestion, until my health was gone. I had been doctoring constantly, with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which done me more good than any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITAS' DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health, from whatever cause.
JOHN T. MISH.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood, am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

THOSE HIBERNIANS.

THEY GIVE A GRAND BALL WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Germania Park Hall Floor Crowded with Dancers All Evening—The Sixth Annual Affair of the Kind Given by That Order.

If nothing more, the sixth annual ball of the Ancient Order of Hibernians was a financial success, but it was also a very enjoyable affair and the four hundred ladies and gentlemen present were more than well pleased.

John Hagan, Thos Ryan, D. J. Harlow Frank O'Keefe, Anthony McLaughlin and M. Sweney were on the reception committee, while T. J. McFarland, J. T O'Keefe, James Cusic, T. J. McGrath, D. F. Ryan and M. H. Finn acted as floor managers.

It was nearly 9 o'clock before the grand march occurred, and fifty-two couples participated in this and then followed the twenty-two dances on the program. The floor was crowded. It was almost impossible to get around and if many more had patronized the dance Germania Park hall would not have accommodated them.

The music was furnished by Prof. Zender's orchestra, of Kenton, Ohio, which was considered fair by most of the dancers, but was a lamentable disappointment to many present. The committee on music was not aware that a first-class orchestra could be secured in Marion at the time of hiring the Zender organization. C. O. Drew acted as prompter.

The refreshments were served in the hall. At 12 o'clock the room was cleared and tables were arranged, at which oysters and coffee were served. During the evening refreshments were also served at booths in the hall. After the intermission for supper there came a season of more dancing, and it was after 2 o'clock in the morning that the last car left the hall with the last of the guests.

The Hibernians were pleased. They were all smiles. The order has a nice cash surplus to its credit. It gave one of the largest dances that has ever been given in Marion.

Revival Meeting at LaRue.

The village of LaRue, fourteen miles west of here, is now experiencing a great religious revival. The revival services are being held at the M. E. church, and a wondrous religious work is resulting from the same. From ten to twelve are said to be converted each night.

The meetings are still continuing and the church is not large enough to afford room to those who wish to attend. All of the denominations of the place are taking interest in the services, which are unequaled by any previous religious meeting that have ever occurred there.

Talking Wheel Club Again.

There is some talk of starting a wheel club here for next season. There are many cyclists in Marion, and an effort will be made to open up a club house.

The idea that is suggested is to lease a room down street where wheels can be left, and where the wheelmen can meet and enjoy the many conveniences that such an organization would afford. Other cities no larger than Marion have such institutions and they prove quite profitable to the wheelmen, as well as enjoyable. It would be the means of preventing many thefts of bicycles.

Getting Pointers.

The Marion county democratic executive committee went to Bucyrus yesterday returning today. The committee went for the purpose of investigating the workings of the primary nomination scheme and found, so the members of the committee say, that the system worked charmingly, in Crawford county.

The committee will at once proceed to get out instructions in regard to the system so that its plans may be known by the democracy throughout the county.

ON A FREIGHT TRAIN.

Detective McEldowney Leaves Marion for His Old Home.

James McEldowney, Esq., the erstwhile private detective who earned an unenviable reputation by accumulating evidence against violators of the saloon ordinances, has left Marion. He departed Wednesday morning at 3 o'clock, taking a C., H. V. and T. southbound freight train.

McEldowney explained to Policeman Barnhart his intentions, confiding in him the fact that he was in financial straits. He explained that he was unable to procure work in Marion and found it necessary to beat railway trains for his passage out of the city or walk. His destination is somewhere in Pennsylvania, and he expected it would require six days, under his mode of travel, to reach there. Mrs. McEldowney remains in the city, but the husband explained that he expected to send means, by which she could join him, at the earliest possible date.

As a detective McEldowney was not a pronounced success, one reason being, no doubt, that the means by which he arrived at ends were not on a popular and approved order. He met with much annoyance immediately after he bloomed out as a sleuth and there were more thorns than roses in the business for him.

A NEW LODGE.

Richwood Will Institue a New Junior Order Council.

There will be a large gathering of the members of the Junior Order of American Mechanics at Richwood on next Monday night, and there will be many from this city in attendance. Preparations are now being made to go to that place to assist in the institution of a new council. There is no council at that place, and recently a charter was granted for a lodge there.

It is one of the largest charter lists yet to start in a small place. The membership for the charter consists of sixty-five men. The work is to be done by the council of Green Camp, but both of the local councils will send down large delegations.

POLICE COURT NEWS

Eleven tramps were lodged at the Hotel Carlos Wednesday night. The record of tramps is falling off to a certain extent. The warm weather prevents them from coming in the great numbers that they did.

There was quite a surprise in police court Wednesday evening when Charles Mitchell appeared and asked for a warrant for the arrest of George McCurdy, the State street grocer, real estate dealer and trader. Mitchell is employed by Haley Bros., the proprietors of the feed store in the same block and next door to McCurdy, and he made the affidavit on which the warrant was issued. He alleges that McCurdy has been stealing potatoes from the celler of Haley Brothers, and as he supposed has been furnishing them to his customers. Mitchell further alleges that he caught him almost in the act. The warrant was served and McCurdy was brought before Mayor Nichols, and it was arranged to give the matter a hearing, but the matter will very likely be settled, as the men were in police court this morning trying to come to an understanding.
